Poetry.

A Cremation Elegy.

De mortuis nil nisi bones.

"Where is thy grave, my love? I want to weep."
—Punch.

The [illegible]-stark through which my love has [illegible]
Be sacred now with all perpetual awe;
Her ashes, shrouded in this hollow urn,
Are all that's left of dead love's fond desires.

How oft, when wandering near this hallowed spot,
And thinking of the days that are no more,
My musings have been broken by a voice
Through which sweet Kate's velutina did pour.

Sweet carbon, lured amounts, water fine,
MO. CO. NH. of distinct smell,
Are all she left behind, when she from corpse
Alone for ever fled, whence no one knows.

Thus the Spirit, the Soul, the Ghost and Shade,
Vanish from us, and we see them no more;
Yet, in the Urn, we find the ashes left,
Through which sweet Kate's velutina did pour.

DUDLEY'S ESCAPE.

"Well Master Dudley, and what news have you now? How fares the cause of his Majesty and King?"

The speaker was a Worcestershire squire. The person whom he addressed was a man of fine presence and military bearing; of good descent, yet with a decided business turn. His father had been a nobleman and at the same time an iron manufacturer. This son had left Oxford at twenty to assume direction of his father's forge and furnaces.

In such work he was deeply interested and actively engaged when the great civil war broke out—the war between Charles I. and the people of England. Dudley, by reason of birth and education espoused the cause of the King, and had risen to the rank of general of artillery. After many successes by the Parliamentary army, a full had fallen which was broken in 1663 by tumults and uprising in Wales.

The influence of this commotion had extended through all England, but the vigorous measures of Fairfax, the Parliamentary commander, had compelled the consentration of the insurgents at Colchester, in Essex. Against them a strenuous siege was being carried on by Fairfax, at the time our story opens.

"Ill enough, Master Hodgson," was [illegible] "Here is Colchester, and Ireton, Cromwell's son-in-law, is at Chelmsford, and Cromwell himself is at Ipswich. Unless we can hold out till Monck comes down from Scotland we must surrender at discretion."

"Ay, and what then? Ireton is but a Puritan, and Cromwell is but a Puritan, and Monck is but a Puritan, and Parliament is but a Puritan, and I am but a Puritan, and we are all Puritans together, and we will hold Colchester for King Charles."

"Hush, for God's sake!"

"Why, what ails you? Are you afraid of your own shadow? Ha! ha! ha! Why, man, I have seen you—"

"Hush, I say! Hark! Do you hear that?"

"Hear what? I hear you talking like a madman."

"Listen, then! Do you hear that?"

"Why, it is the tramp of a horse."

"Of many horses, you mean."

"Well, what of that? Rupert may be coming to our relief."

"Rupert! Rupert! Rupert is a Cavalier, and Cromwell's troopers are between us and him."

"Well, what of that? Rupert may be coming to our relief."
