A correspondent furnishes the Portland Arms with the following relating to the introduction of tea into Maine: The first ton drock in Maine was made on Cutt's Island, Kittery, about 167 years ago. A daughter of Major Cutt was returning from school in Massa-chasetts with a daughter of Governor Vaughn. A severe storm detained her at the governor's house at Portsmouth several days, and at the governor's table she was first offered tea. The young lady followed Mme Vaughn's example, and adding sugar and cream, carried it to her hips. She after wards purchased a pound of tea for a guinea, sent to
