FRENCH MINISTRY DEFEATED

BY A MAJORITY OF 40 ON THE EIGHT-HOUR BILL.

The Crisis Brought About by the Government Attempting to Prevent Workingmen From Joining Trades Unions—A Victory for the Socialists—Ministers Take Their Defeat Calmly.

PARIS, May 22.—There was great excitement in the Chamber of Deputies when Deputy Guesde introduced the miners' eight-hour bill and demanded a vote of urgency upon it. This demand adduced a flood of stock Socialist arguments, in violent language, denouncing the Bourgeois, employers' treatment of miners as slaves, human cattle, etc. These harangues were interrupted by the members of the centre, but the Socialists continued to shriek retorts to the points made by the Centrists. Anyone not used to the ways of the French Chamber might have expected that the strong language and menacing gestures indulged in would lead to hand-to-hand encounters, but they did not. President Dupuy showered calls for order upon the chamber right and left and finally succeeded in obtaining quiet.

It did not last long, however, for M. Guesde soon began a hot altercation with the chair.

M. Berthout opposed urgency. He protested against the language used by Guesde and also against the gentleman's pretence that the Socialists alone voiced the sentiments of the workingmen. He demanded that the bill be referred to the Labor Commission. The demand for urgency, he declared, was nothing but a political manœuvre of the intriguing chiefs of a noisy minority.

M. Basly supported the demand for urgency and advised the reference of the bill to a special commission.

M. Guesde assented to the reference of the bill to a special commission and continued his speech by saying the workingmen had commissioned him on May-day to introduce the bill and hasten its discussion.

The Ministry Defeated.

M. Dupuy said the whole Chamber was in communication with the country. M. Guesde, he said, did not possess a monopoly of the views of the workingmen.

M. Guesde said every deputy was entitled to present to the chamber an expression of aspirations of the people without being silenced by the president or even by a majority of the chamber.

The bill was then, by a vote of 401 to 94, referred to the ordinary Labor Commission.

Premier Casimir-Perier demanded the order of the day, pure and simple, and the demand was rejected by a vote of 265 to 225. All of the Ministers thereupon withdrew.

The cause of the crisis, though seemingly trifling, really related to the general policy of Premier Casimir-Perier and also to the Premier's aspirations to the Presidency.

Socialist Workingmen Cause the Crisis.

The workingmen's syndicates, under the laws of 1884, had become a powerful and terrorizing machine under Socialist control. The Government had determined to repress the system, and therefore, by continuing M. Dupuy's policy of closing the Labor Exchange, endeavored to prevent the railwaymen's congress.

In pursuance of this policy M. Jonnart, Minister of Public Works, privately advised the railroad companies not to grant leave of absence to men in their employ, at the same time promising that the Government would not afford to the employes facilities to attend the Congress. M. Jonnart, during the debate, admitted that he had refused to grant leaves of absence to delegates, but urged in defence of his action that he could not allow servants of the state to form a syndicate against the mass of taxpayers of the nation.

For other reasons, also, he did not believe, he said, that servants of the state ought to belong to trades unions.

Several moderates, including MM. Ouvre and Ramel replied to M. Jonnart with intense warmth, scathingly rebuking him for the sentiments he had uttered.

Premier Casimir-Perier took the defeat of the Ministry calmly, turning his face in the direction of his colleagues and laughing as he was leaving the chamber.

After the departure of Ministers from the Chamber M. De Ramel's order of the day recognizing the right of employes of the state to join workingmen's syndicates was carried by 251 to 223, and the Chamber adjourned until Monday.

A Socialist Victory.

As the Ministers left the Chamber the Radicals acted like a crowd of schoolboys, clapping their hands and jumping up and down, shouting and indulging in all sorts of antics indicative of delight. Several deputies rushed across the chamber and embraced Miller and Ouvre. The deafening noise within the chamber was heard outside. The Socialist deputies acclaimed their victory with shouts of "This is our revenge for the outrageous treatment of Thivrier (the Communist deputy who was arrested and suspended for shouting "Vive la Commune!" in the chamber a few months ago).

M. de Ramel's final words from the rostrum were: "The Government must not take democratic attitudes at banquets and then when they come to act refuse workingmen the right to join syndicates."

The Ministers Resign.

This evening the Ministers left the private room in which they had been conferring and proceeded in a body to the Palais d'Elysee and formally tendered their resignation to President Carnot. As they left the chamber the Socialists shouted: "Long live the social Republic!" and "Long live the Commune!"

POLICE HAVEN'T TIME TO PARADE

They Will Not Participate in the Dominion Day Tomfoolery.

The Board of Police Commissioners yesterday ratified the agreement with the Bell Telephone Company with regard to the signal service system.

The proposition from the City Council that the police take part in the Dominion Day celebration was taken up and the commissioners decided that the police would have enough to do in looking after the city and decided not to allow them to take part in any parade.

The truancy report for April showed that 606 cases had been investigated and 570 children sent back to school.

Applications for additional police protection were received from residents in the West and East Ends of the city, but cannot at present be acceded to.

Detective Slemin recovered the watch in a York-street pawn shop, but he has not yet found the ring.

Press and Express.

Several of our daily contemporaries placing headlines on some of the late news and parenthesis it with the statement, "By Empire State Press." Why not go a step farther, brethren, and put a similar remark under the headings of the boiler-plate dispatches in the same issues, only label these "By Empire State Express?" The New York Central's new train is almost lightning itself, and it would be no reflection on the service if the dispatches came in a box on this train rather than otherwise.—Canajoharie Courier.

SOLVING A 35-YEAR MYSTERY

A CRIME REVEALED BY AN APPARITION.

Man's Skeleton Dug Up Near Croton, Ont., Bearing Evidence That He Had Been Murdered—Detectives Working on the Case—Story of the Alleged Crime as Related by Detective Wade.

CROTON, Ont., May 22.—Detective Walter Wade is working on a murder case 35 years old. His chief clue is a human skull, bearing unmistakeable signs of ante mortem fracture. It is crushed in on the right side, as though by a heavy blow.

The skull is part of a skeleton dug up near this village a few days ago by James Sutherland and Alexander Cooper, two most respectable men. With them were Robert Weldok and Robert Ellis, whose unearthly experiences the previous night were the cause of the search being made. Weldon and Ellis had been fishing. It was night time when they returned home. As they neared the village they noticed a peculiar light hovering about a huge elm tree by the roadside. It surprised them by its strange color and sudden appearance. As they drew nearer, they were startled by the appearance of a man's figure directly under the tree. The young men do not deny that the apparition scared them mortally.

They told their tale on reaching their homes and it suggested to two near neighbors the digging which took place the next morning, and which revealed a human skeleton lying face downward, the skull caved in as by a murderous crack.

Soon the news spread and by and bye old inhabitants began to recall an event of the long ago which might have to do with the remains found in the grave. Here is the story as told by Detective Wade:

Disappeared in 1859.

In 1859 Charles Riley, a farmhand, mysteriously disappeared from the neighborhood and was never afterwards heard of. That he committed suicide there is not the slightest reason to believe, for he was a healthy, happy man, without any care in the world, having a snug sum laid up in wages, and being a general favorite in the Wabash settlement. He had no reason to end his own life. Furthermore, he left his earnings and his effects at the home of the farmer for whom he worked, one Hopper, said nothing about quitting, and could not have meant to leave the country. He simply disappeared as if the ground had swallowed him up—which, possibly it did through the agency of hands which took his life. Just here should be told the circumstances preceding the young farm laborer's sudden disappearance. Two days before he had hired a horse to go to Dawn on some business, but went on to Sweden. It was reported that he had stolen the horse and, accordingly, a hunt for him was organized. Two men, who are still alive, followed Riley and overtook him at what was known as Tiffin school house. They proceeded to inflict summary punishment on the supposed horsethief. Residents in the vicinity, of whom are mentioned Webster, Badder and Tiffin, witnessed the encounter and saw young Riley badly beaten. The last Webster saw of him he was lying under a big tree, apparently unconscious. Next morning he was gone.

The affair was reported to Magistrate Smith, since deceased, and inquiry followed, but no proof could be brought against the two men suspected of making away with Riley, other than here recorded. The witness, indeed, testified for the defense that he had met Riley, making his way off in a hurry the day following his supposed death. The case was allowed to drop, and the suspects were discharged from custody.

It is a singular coincidence that the spot whese the skeleton was dug up a few days ago is within a few rods of where Riley was last seen lying apparently insensible after the assault on him by the two men. Road work was in progress at the time, and the theory held by the officer who is looking into the case is that the body was hastily buried at night on the roadside where the scrapers had been used, and where the signs of its concealment would not be apparent. On this night the men against whom suspicion was directed stopped at Hannan's Hotel, close by. It would be easy for them, finding they had killed Riley, to secrete the body in the way mentioned.

These two men are still living—one near Kent Bridge, the other near Morpeth. They are both past 70 years of age, and one, at least, continues to bear the hard name he had 33 years ago. Whether anything will come of the detective's investigation remains to be seen, but he is working diligently on the case, gathering up all the evidence he can, and resolved, if it be at all possible, to bring home the crime to the guilty parties, whoever they may be.

A Clever Dog.

Scarcely anything is lacking the mental furniture of this psychological dog to make him the equal of a baby 2 years old, except thinking in words, and who can prove that he is destitute of this faculty, although not possessing articulate speech? One evening while I was giving my plants a drink he came to me several times, asking me to have the gate opened. Not caring to lay down the hose, I paid little heed to his teasings, and he determined to compass his purpose in another way. To the front door he went, and pressing it found it not latched, but requiring some force to throw it open. Then he backed out the full width of the verandah, and running threw his weight so violently against the door as to drive it open. Very soon he reappeared with his mistress, to whom he had made his supplication, and she, without knowing of his failure with me, opened the gate and gave the little fellow his coveted freedom. It should be explained in regard to the wit shown in opening a heavy or sticking door that Toots acquired his experience with a fly door closed by the reaction of a spring. He found by experiments that if with his four paws he pressed this door open just far enough to emit his body it would spring to and pinch his tail, and that by retreating and running the whole length of a small entry he would impart momentum enough to open the door wide and thus clear his tail, at the same time letting out a dependent companion. This act, I am inclined to think, is a little smarter than is usual in a 2-year-old child.—Popular Science Monthly.

A WOMAN HUMORIST.

Miss Marietta Holley, the Creator of "Josiah Allen's Wife."

In this restless age and country it is rare for five generations of one family to have lived in uninterrupted continuance in the ancestral homestead; but Marietta Holley, the delineator of "Josiah Allen's Wife," can claim this distinction. Between Pierpont Manor and Adams, in Jefferson Co., N. Y., and not more than seven miles from Lake Ontario, is situated the Holley homestead. The five generations of Holleys have lived quiet, peaceful lives on this beautiful spot.

MISS HOLLEY.

The parents of Miss Marietta Holley moved into the little brown cottage the day after their marriage, and remained there until borne to their last resting-place. Six children were born and reared there, but only one sister remains with Miss Holley at the family birthplace.

Miss Holley spends most of her winters in town, but her summers at Bonnie View, the name given by the writer to her country home. When at her summer home she usually retires from 9 o'clock in the morning until 1 o'clock, and then takes advantage of the beautiful drives in the vicinity of her home during the afternoon and evening.

When questioned regarding her work, Miss Holley said to a correspondent of the New York Tribune that she had "always written."

"I began when I was a mere child," she added, "and, of course, like most beginners, was inclined to be sentimental, although I had strong sense of the humorous. In selecting my nom de plume I think I was somewhat influenced by the name of Artemus Ward. I discovered later that some man had copyrighted the name of 'Josiah Allen's Wife,' but I was able to prove my prior rights. When I first wrote for publication, "I submitted 'Gypsy and I,' and 'My Opinions and Betsy Bobbits.' The former was not in dialect, and I considered it much the better of the two. The publisher chose the latter, but it took a great deal of argument before I could be convinced that that would be most popular."

Miss Holley's tone seemed to express regret at the choice made, even though her work has met with such success. She said that "Gypsy and I" had never been brought out, although several of her published books are not in dialect. In referring to the play called "Betsy Bobbit," she said:

"The play was taken from my book, and when Neil Burgess first produced it, he paid me a royalty for the play and for using some of Samantha's speeches. He afterwards altered the play a trifle, and changed the name to 'Vim,' and then discontinued my royalty. I wrote a play subsequently, entirely unlike this, and called it 'Betsy Bobbit.' It has been produced several times for charity, and at school exhibitions. While I have received a great many kind letters from all parts of the world, I have experienced fully as much pleasure from the letters from some charming children of missionaries in Japan as from more important people. They were so simple and sincere, and went straight to my heart."

All Miss Holley's books teach some good and homely lessons, and all have had an astonishing success. Most people know her through her prose writings, but she has also written verse. Mr. Whittier once wrote to her regarding one of her poems: "I have read thy poems with great satisfaction. With the wit and wisdom of 'Josiah Allen's Wife' I have long been familiar. I read thy beautiful poem, 'The Deacon's Daughter,' with moist eyes. It is perfect, and it does not, by any means, stand alone in the volume."

Miss Holley talks into a phonograph, and her writings are then copied by her typewriter, who has become so accustomed to the dialect of 'Josiah Allen's Wife" that he has no difficulty in taking it from the instrument.

Electricity Under Ground.

It gives an impressive idea what subterranean London is fast becoming to learn that on emerging from the river the new City and Waterloo Line will, in its passage up Queen Victoria street, run for a part of the way underneath the low level main sewer, which in its turn runs along beneath the District Underground Railway. So that at this point in the city we shall have first a busy main thoroughfare, below that a steam railway, then a huge metropolitan sewer, then an electric railway, reaching its terminus at a depth of about sixty-three feet below the streets, and here it will communicate with another line—the Central London—which will lie at a depth of eighty feet.

These letters refer to an honorable title recently conferred upon several prominent Canadians by Her Majesty Queen Victoria. S.M.T. refers to the Students' Mixture Tobacco, which is guaranteed pure, of excellent quality, and in every way a pleasant smoke. Once tried means continued use. Try it.

Milan a Menace to European Peace.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 22.—The Russian press characterize ex-King Milan of Servia in the severest terms, declaring his intrigues are likely to compromise the general peace of Europe and demanding his immediate withdrawal from the kingdom to which he promised not to return.

How She Gets Rid of Them.

"Do you know," said a dearly pretty little girl, "I go about alone a great deal, and I never have any or the trouble that other girls tell me about, and I do believe it is because I am so sociable." It seemed an odd reason and I asked explanation.

"Well, you see," she said, "I hardly ever go anywhere without having the usual 'masher' approach me and say: 'Excuse me, miss, but I think I have met you before.' You know that is the regular phrase. Well, I always look up frankly and study his face a minute in perfect good faith. He is sure to turn red and get wabbly. Then I say with careful courtesy, as if desirous to save him embarrassment, 'I am sure you are mistaken; I know I have never seen you before.' I have never known an instant apology to fail, nor a fellow of this kind to act any other way than most desirous to appear the gentleman for which I seem to have mista
