A SCENE OF SPLENDOR.

A ROYAL MARRIAGE AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

Prince Aribert of Anhalt the Happy Groom—The Bride Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein—Brilliant Company Crowd St. George's Chapel—Archbishop of Canterbury Performs the Ceremony.

LONDON, July 6.—Shortly after 4 o'clock, amid a scene of splendor and with most imposing ceremonies, the Princess Louise second daughter of Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, and granddaughter of the Queen of England, was married to Prince Aribert of Anhalt in the historic St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle.

Not since the marriage of the late Duke of Albany has the castle been crowded with so many distinguished people, and not since that event has the chapel been so crowded with members of the royal families.

The decorations of this chapel royal were grand in the extreme. The stalls of the Knights of the Garter were set aside for some of the most important guests, and the Bray and Rutland chapels were fitted up as retiring rooms.

The route followed by the procession was the same as that taken at the wedding of the Duke of Albany. This route down Castle hill, was lined on both sides with troops, and at the castle guards of honor, composed of Life Guards and Scots Guards, were mounted at every available point. The royal standard of Great Britain, from the highest tower of the castle, floated proudly over the whole, while here, there and every where were dazzling uniforms, gorgeous staffs, and state carriages containing diplomats, statesmen, generals, admirals, princes of minor degree and high church dignitaries.

Down Castle hill the Eton boys on the sward on the left ran with the carriage of the royal family, as they were driven down from Henry VIII.'s gateway, and cheered like a pack of young demons let loose for the occasion.

The first portion of the procession was formed by the carriages containing the bridegroom's family. The second section consisted of carriages which conveyed to the chapel the Emperor and Empress of Germany and the imperial party, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Prince Henry of Battenberg and his wife, the Princess Beatrice, the Princess Louise and the Duchess of Fife. The Prince of Anhalt the bridegroom, wearing a German uniform, with his attendants, formed the third section of the procession.

The Queen of England, in the most elaborate of all the carriages, surrounded by Life Guardsmen on magnificent horses, arms, cuirasses, and helms flashing brightly, formed the fourth joint of this bewilderingly attractive procession.

The state carriages alone, with their gold and velvet trappings, outriders in scarlet uniforms and pickers, prancing steeds, coats of arms and other elaborations, were alone worth travelling a considerable distance to see. The Queen was greeted everywhere with the wildest acclamation of loyalty.

The bride accompanied by her father, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holestin and by her brother, had already driven from Cumberland lodge, their residence, to Windsor Castle, and as the Queen started for St. George's Chapel the bride and her two male relatives followed.

As each and every member of the imperial or royal families reached the chapel royal, their arrival was heralded by a resounding blast from the trumpets of the state trumpeters, whose crimson and gold uniforms gave them a most gorgeous appearance.

At the chapel doors the wedding guests were received by the lord chamberlain, Earl of Lathom, who ushered them with much ceremony to their places about the altar.

In front of the altar a dais was erected and was covered with a blue velvet carpet, with the Order of the Garter and the royal arms handsomely interwoven in its centre. Upon this royal carpet were velvet and gold seats for the members of the imperial and royal families. The banners of the Knights of the Garter, all renewed for the occasion, overhung the seats of the other important guests. Beside plants and flowers, there were no other decorations inside the chapel, for any further ornamentation would only have served to detract from the natural beauty of the ancient church edifice.

The Prince of Wales entered the chapel, having upon his arm the Empress of Germany, who wore a sea green moire antique. They were followed by the Emperor of Germany, escorting the Princess of Wales, whose bodice was sparkling with German and English orders, and who wore a most splendid parure of diamonds.

The Emperor and the Princess of Wales were followed by the Queen of England, who wore a simple, black dress, plainly, though gracefully made. Upon her head the Queen wore a beautiful diamond coronet, but with this exception there was little or no ornamentation about the Queen's attire.

In spite of the plain dress of her majesty, she was certainly not the least attractive of the women present, her quiet dignity and evident sense of power adding greatly to her charm.

After Queen Victoria had been escorted by the lord chamberlain to the seat of honor, close to the altar, the bridegroom, in company with his two brothers, appeared and was led to the altar by the lord chamberlain.

About 10 minutes later the bride arrived, supported by her father and brother.

The bride's dress was of cream white satin of most exquisite texture. It was bordered with orange blossoms, and the skirt was draped with Honiton duchesse lace, which was designed by the late prince consort for the Queen, and which was afterward worn by the bride's mother, the Princess Christian just 25 years ago, for the Prince and Princess Christain will celebrate their silver wedding at Cumberland lodge on Wednesday next.

The train of this handsome dress hung gracefully from under the basque in plain straight folds, and was what is known as the Sabot or well-rounded shape, its border of white buds and green giving it a very effective appearance.

The bodice was equally handsome. It was of white satin, with sleeves of Honiton lace, similar to that on the skirt. A girdle of orange blossoms and myrtle blossoms, hanging down in two long ends, hid the juncture of the bodice and the skirt, and fell gracefully over the satin train.

As jewelry the bride wore a necklace of diamonds and pearls, the gift of her parents. The wedding veil was the one worn by the Princess Christian upon the occasion of her marriage.

The bridesmaids were Ladies Emily Cadogon, Edith Ward, Mabel Egerton, Elizabeth Meade, Esther Gore, and the Hon. Beatrice Bridgman. They wore handsome white satin dresses draped with delicate white crepe de chine, and caught up with bows of frosted silver. All wore small ostrich plumes in their hair, and had silver girdles around their waists. The bridal bouquets were composed of Marechal Niel roses.

The archbishop of Canterbury performed the marriage service, which was most simple, and made only a brief exhortation. The bridegroom's responses were given in a clear, firm voice, but those of the bride were indistinct. The bride was given away by her father, Prince Christian. After the service Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was played, and the wedding ceremony was concluded.

After the benediction the Queen advanced and kissed the bride. The Emperor insisted upon the same privilege, and then the bride was kissed by all the princesses. The procession was then reformed, and returned to the castle, the Queen preceding by a private door so as to be in readiness to receive the couple.

Here there was a pretty scene in the green drawing room. All assembled to sign the register, the Queen's signature following those of the Emperor and Empress. On the route to Chiveden, the Duke of Westminister's residence, where the couple will spend the honeymoon, the bride, in a white Bergoline travelling dress, was greeted with the usual showers of rice, satin slippers and flowers.

A grand banquet at the castle closed the day, which differed from that on Saturday in that the Emperor was not the chief attraction, yet his presence made itself felt, the Queen treating him with marked courtesy.

A noteworthy incident occurred in the chapel on the arrival of the Queen. The Emperor and Empress bowed low and the Queen did the same; but the Queen, whose age privileges her to sit at every ceremony declined to be seated before the Emperor, and a little contest of courtesy occurred. Finally the Emperor, knowing that it was painful to the Queen to stand, took her by the hand and compelled her to be seated.

In the evening the Queen drove through Windsor to see the decorations. The Emperor and Empress meanwhile walked to Frogmore House. A Venetian fete and a display of fireworks were given on the Thames tonight.

A ROYAL BANQUET.

With Nine Million Dollars Worth of Gold Plate on the Table.

BY TELEGRAPH TO THE GAZETTE.

LONDON, July 8.—A state banquet was given in St. George's Hall last evening. The guests sat at the table 150 feet long upon which were displayed gold candlebras and the whole of the royal plate, valued at £1,800,000. Besides the full muster of royalties there were present Lord Salisbury, Lord Kimberly, Count Von Hatzfeldt, the Russian embassador, Lord Hartington, the Duke and Duchess of Portland and Baron Von Bieborstein, the German foreign secretary. Toasts were drank to the health of the emperor and empress and to the health of the Queen.

A SERIOUS CHARGE.

Two German Doctors Accused of Experimenting With Hospital Patients.

BY TELEGRAPH TO THE GAZETTE.

BERLIN, July 7.—Dr. Leidig has raised a sensation by accusing Prof. Bergmann and Dr. Hahn of experimenting with cancer inoculations since 1887 on the hospital patients without their knowledge or consent. Drs. Bergmann and Hahn admit the truth of the charge but claim that in every case the patient was past recovery. They add as an excuse that it is necessary to select human beings for experiment, as the lower animals are unsuitable.

MURPHY ON THE STAND.

HIS MEMORY IS VERY BAD AND IS GROWING WORSE

His Mind is a Perfect Blank as to the Time and Place When He Paid Sir Hector that $10,000—Murphy faints On the Witness Stand.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE)

OTTAWA, July 7.—At the session of the committee on privileges and elections to-day, Martin P. Connolly produced a number of books of the firm of Larkin, Connolly & Co., for which he had been sent to Quebec. These included bank books from 1879 to the present time, numbers of notes, cheques and several account books. He said he had brought everything in the office relating to the enquiry. Murphy, he said, took all his own personal books when he left the firm.

Mr. Osler proceeded in the cross examination of Murphy who was asked as to a statement appearing in his dairy as to the disposal of seven thousand dollars he claimed been paid in the Quebec West election for Thos. McGreevy. He would not swear his entries were correct, in fact he rather thought they were not correct. Being reminded of the entry read from his private memorandum yesterday for Flynn he said this was paid in two sums of $250 and fifty. He did not know there was more than one Flynn who got money and did not think Flynn got two hundred and fifty twice. He was then shown this entry in his diary for eighteen eighty seven, "Wednesday 2nd, March, Flynn-Robert McGreevy two hundred and fifty dollars paid." He could not tell what this meant, but he now thought Flynn must be paid two hundred and fifty twice or that Robert returned the money to him.

"Oh, that's your way out of it," observed Osler.

"That's my way out of it," was the cool reply.

Murphy today carried an umbrella, no doubt anticipating a storm. He kept it for a time under his arm but in the excitement of referring to his private memorandum he had laid it aside. At this juncture he reached back and seized his umbrella, but chairman Girouard mistaking the movement, seized his arm for a moment.

Tarte wildly protested that the witness must be allowed the umbrella to lean on if he desired and the chairman relented. "I was afraid he was reaching for a club" he said.

The Esquimalt work was next considered. Witness said it was in Sept. 1884, that he saw Sir Hector Langevin and offered him a twenty-five per cent interest in the contract. He did not know whether it was on this special business that he went to see Sir Hector. There might have been other business. He was reminded of his statement this twenty-five per cent interest which was to stand in Robt. McGreevy's name was consequently made twenty per cent on a promise by witness that he would make it up some other way and Osler asked if he had five thousand on account of being paid Thos. McGreevy at the time the contract was signed. He did not know how this money was paid and was unable to account for there being no entry of such payment. Witness was then asked as to the ten thousand he said he had paid Sir Hector but as to the time and manner of the payment his memory was a total blank. He finally said the entry must be in one of his diaries. Mr. Osler asked him to look it up. Murphy replied it would take a couple of days.

Murphy resuming said he thought it must have been in 1886 or 7.

Osler proceeded to show that transactions small and great appeared to have been entered without reference to their importance and he read this as a sample.

April 20. Visited Tarte at his house and in evening played draw poker at my house and won three from Robt. McGreevy."

Tarte interrupted and said he did not play cards. The witness could not remember whether it was midsummer he paid the ten thousand to Sir Hector. He could not tell where he got the money but supposed it was from a bank but could not tell what bank. It was either the Union or Bank of British North America. He thought he paid the money in the day time. Could not say whether or not he had himself drawn the cheques on which he got the money or to whose order they were drawn. He had no idea what bills he got. He professed to have no recollection of the details of the transaction. Mr. Osler than read Murphy's main examination last week in which he professed a good recollection of this transaction and had said he drew the money on cheques signed by him in name of the firm and he believes were endorsed by Nicholas Connolly. He had then said also he asked for hundred dollar bills but the bank had not got them and he had to take fifties and twenties. He had no recollection any entry having been made of this payment.

Mr. Osler read from his main evidence in which witness said this item represented money he paid Sir Hector. He also read from his evidence the statement of witness that while he could not say how he got this money his checks would show, and he asked Murphy to produce the checks.

Murphy in reply said he could not find any such checks, he was not aware if any were missing, his bank book did not show there were.

Witness was next asked in regard to a statement made in his evidence that he had gone to Thos. McGreevy to bribe his influence to have location of the sewer of the south wall changed. He said his evidence was correct and the change asked by the firm was made. He was then shown the entry in his diary of 1889 and asked if it was in his hand-writing. Witness admitted his writing.

Osler read the entry which was as follows: "South wall sewer been raised from original specifications 2 feet 9 without my permission." When Osler was about to resume, witness took a glass of water. A moment later Murphy paused in the middle of his answer, staggered, and would have fallen had he not been caught by the chairman. The witness was placed in a chair and soon recovered consciousness but assumed a deathly pallor. The committee adjourned.

THIRTY YEARS AGO, this month marked the arrival of the last sailing emigrant vessel from the mother country that ever came into the port of Saint John. She was the barque Irving, with Scotch emigrants brought out by Rev. Mr. Glass, from Scotland, many of whom settled at the place now known as Glassville, Carleton Co. They were some of New Brunswick's most intelligent and energetic settlers and they and their descendants are among the most enterprising residents of their county. The children on board the Irving were suffering from measles on her arrival and the vessel was quarrantined.
