IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of my dear mother, Mrs. Edward McGowan, who departed this life March 23rd, 1911. Gone, but not forgotten.

We must forever part.

Dearest loved one we have laid thee

But thy memory will be cherished
Till we see thy heavenly face.

JEWS NOT SATISFIED WITH CHANGE MADE

Kingston, Ont., March 23—At a conference between trustees of Queens and representatives of the Presbyterian church regarding the "Christian" clause in the Queen's bill, it was decided to moderate the clause so that any one of "good Christian character" may be appointed a professor in the institution.

The clause originally required a religious test of Christianity for any professor. "There is no difference whatever," said prominent Jews this morning. "We are not satisfied at all and we will carry the case to England."

Friends of Queens say their clause as moderated does not debar Jews from becoming professors.

POWER MAY COME AFTER THE TEST

Speaking of the changes in the city charter as regards appointments of certain civic officials, Hon. R. Maxwell who was in the city today said that the feeling was if the commissioners showed the capability expected of them, an amendment might in future be made whereby they would have the power necessary for the appointments.

FIGHT WITH MANIAC ON HOUSETOP

Boston Policemen Overcome Butero After Terrific Struggle

SOUGHT TO END LIFE

Long Fought Battle on Roof to Prevent Him Plunging Six Stories to His Death — Maniac's Momentary Pause Gives Opportunity Quickly Taken

Boston, March 22—A maniac in an attempt to commit suicide by jumping from the roof of the six-story tenement house at 32 Charter street, North End, terrorized the residents of the vicinity, who filled the street watching his desperate fight with two policemen who rescued him.

Galtano Buetro, aged twenty-seven, is married and lives in the Charter street tenement house with his family. For some days he has been behaving strangely and the family has been watching him closely for fear he might kill himself or do bodily harm to others.

Butero had just reached the roof and the crowd in the street was watching him breathlessly, as he crept to the edge. Two policemen from the Hanover street station came rushing through the street. They pushed their way through the crowd of bystanders and ran up through the house and clambered upon the roof just in time to prevent Butero from plunging to his death.

They climbed out upon the roof, spurred to desperation by the appeals of the frantic wife to "save him," and reached the madman as he was about to leap down six stories. Butero had fastened the loose end of an old rope to a pole which projected out over the street, and the other end was securely fastened about his body. The battle became a fierce one. The maniac fought the policeman like a savage beast and bit, scratched and screamed in his frenzy.

Early in the morning Butero became very violent and ran about his house, shouting and screaming that he would kill himself. Mrs. Butero, although filled with terror, bravely followed her insane husband about, striving to quiet and comfort him and to induce him to remain in his bed. The insane man suffered from the delusion that somebody was following and abusing him and bound to cut him into pieces and scatter the parts to the four winds.

Butero shrieked as only a maniac can and within a few minutes everybody in the house and in the immediate vicinity was frightened by his antics and screams. The occupants fled to the streets and ran to places of safety.

In the meantime Butero had secured a piece of old rope and fastened one end of it about his body. He then ran to the roof, followed by his devoted wife and a brave man, who, hearing her pathetic cries for help, went to her aid. Mrs. Butero and the man fought desperately with the insane Butero and did all in their power to prevent him from reaching the roof. The lunatic scratched and bit them and snarled like a savage beast. His strength was finally too much for them.

The crowd in the street watched the two patrolmen and the maniac wrestling dangerously near the edge of the roof, where one mis-step would cause all three to be hurled to destruction. Men and women in the crowd screamed and some fainted. Many were obliged to turn their heads and walk away from the awful scene, for they could not tell but what the next moment would reveal three bodies at their feet.

Several times Butero dragged the policemen dangerously near the edge of the roof and each time they dragged him back again a safe distance. Finally when the two were almost exhausted by the strain caused by the superhuman strength of the crazy man Butero paused an instant in the battle for breath and looked bewildered at the policemen. That instant was the one the policemen hoped for. They quickly dropped him to the roof and made him fast with his own rope, dragged him into the house, where he was securely ironed, then carried to the street and placed in the police patrol and taken to the station house.

At the station house Butero was more securely ironed, and Dr. William Dinn gave him some medicine and quieted him, after which he was removed to the Boston Insane Hospital at Austin Farm to be held for observation.

If You Have Done Your Best

(Edgar A. Guest, in Detroit Free Press.)

If you have done your level best
You need not fear to look behind,
At night, in peace, you'll sink to rest
Untroubled then will be your mind.
It will not matter then to you
Whether you've lost your fight or won,
If looking back you do not view
A lot of things you might have done.

If you have done your level best
Your yesterdays will all be sweet,
Your thoughts will never be distressed,
You will not whimper at defeat.
There is no shame in failure, when
You've nobly fought and nobly tried,
Your yesterdays are splendid then,
You need not view them leaden-eyed.

If you can look back when you've trod
And see no reason for regret,
Then forward you may bravely plod;
Your past is not a present debt.
You need not fear your yesterdays
Nor any future time of test,
The world must speak of you with praise
If you have done your level best.
