Skeleton Organization Keeps in Touch With Volunteer Workers.

Stuttgart, Nov. 3.—German industrial leaders believe they have found an effective weapon for fighting general strikes in the Technische Nothilfe, known in Germany and Denmark as the "Red Cross of industry." As evidence they point to the fact that the organization crushed a general strike in the state of Wuerttemberg in five days when that state was menaced with a complete paralysis of all industrial activity.

The Technische Nothilfe was organized at Stuttgart about a year ago and is operating under the direction of the minister of the interior. In normal times only a skeleton office is maintained, which occupies itself with preparations for an emergency. Wuerttemberg is divided into 100 sub-districts, each of which has a leader whose duty is to prepare a list of volunteers able in emergency to operate all the essential industries of the community. The head offices in the city are furnished with a complete list of such volunteers. The active technical emergency managers of essential industries usually are named as chiefs for those industries, and they presumably are non-union men. Among the volunteers listed are university students, engineers, professors in the Polytechnical Institute and unskilled workmen from every class of society.

The central organization makes provision for bedding, foodstuffs and army kitchens for the volunteers, who camp by their jobs.

Each volunteer is informed in advance where to report, and upon the notification of a strike proceeds to that post, where the Technische Nothilfe has delivered supplies considered sufficient for the duration of the strike. It is claimed that in a very short time the central office thus can furnish an operating force for each industry.

The general strike here was called as a protest against the ten per cent tax on workmen's wages. It was arranged by the Communists, but adhered to by the Majority Socialists, the more conservative labor elements and trade unions. Distribution of food ceased, and gas, electric and water service was abandoned. The community was confronted with possible chaos when the Technische Nothilfe stepped in, assumed control and manned every essential post vacated by the strikers, including the highly technical positions.

There was some difficulty in finding men fitted to aid in the heavy work, such as firing furnaces, for few of the volunteers had been accustomed to such labor, but this was solved by working very short shifts. The majority of the 265 men working and living in gas works were Polytechnical students.

There were even union labor men among the volunteers, for some of the labor leaders believe that crtain industries must be kept going to prevent the collapse of a community, and that only the Technische Nothilfe can do this. Some of the conservative labor leaders felt that the control of their organizations might slip out of their hands into those of the extreme radical elements, who would tie up all industries if it were not for the Technische Nothilfe. For these reasons they have made no opposition to union men volunteering for service with that organization.

The strike began at midnight Saturday, the volunteers were ordered on duty Sunday morning, and by Monday morning the industries were functioning on the reduced capacities, but by Wednesday morning normal production had been attained.

Motor trucks were requisitioned for the distribution of food to the volunteer workers, and an appeal was issued to labor, philanthropic and social organizations to aid in protecting the workers and property. The members of the Technische Nothilfe are under obligations to carry no arms.

In less than five days the strikers began to return to work, and as each one took his place, a member of the Technische Nothilfe quit unostentatiously, and in less than a week the strikers were again at their posts.

Chiefs of the Technische Nothilfe in charge of industrial plants at Stuttgart were carefully instructed to obtain written statements as to the condition of the plants when the strikers returned, so that the radicals could not subsequently practice sabotage and charge that it was the work of the Technische Nothilfe.

ROSY COMPLEXIONS COST WOMEN OF U. S. $750,000,000 YEARLY

Rouge Face Powder, Cosmetics and Perfumery Make Huge Bill.

Washington, Nov. 3.—By Canadian Press.—Rosy complexions, ruby lips and fragrant personality cost the women of the United States $750,000,000 last year, according to luxury tax return figures. This enormous sum was expended for rouge, face powder, cosmetics and perfumery.

The cost of cosmetics and perfumery was more than twice that of women's furs—in a year when the fur prices were the highest in history. The amount spent on furs was approximately $300,000,000.

The ladies did their part in spending money on luxuries, but the expenditures were not confined to them. Eight hundred million dollars went up in cigarette smoke, while $510,000,000 was burned up in the form of cigars. Jewelry cost $500,000,000, only 2 per cent of the sum spent on luxuries. The grand total spent on luxuries in the United States during the year 1919 was $22,700,000,000.

A round billion dollars went for candy. Pianos, organs and phonographs entertained the people to the sum of $250,000,000. Automobiles cost $2,000,000,000. Here are some more items which make up the grand total:

Soft drinks, $350,000,000; toilet soaps, $400,000,000; tobacco and snuff, $800,000,000; ice cream, $250,000,000; chewing gum, $50,000,000; cake and confections, $350,000,000; "luxurious services," $3,000,000,000; luxurious food, $5,000,000,000; joy riding, pleasure resorts and races, $3,000,000,000.
