Experiments on Human Beings

Independent Investigation on food power of BOVRIL!

A Report made at the Annual Meeting of the British Medical Association in Birmingham (July, 1911) revealed some remarkable results of physiological experiments showing the body-building power of Bovril on human beings.

10 to 20 times the amount taken.

But these exhaustive experiments have further conclusively demonstrated that "in the human experiments the increase was even more marked."

The conclusions which particularly interest the public, and which are now incontrovertibly established by these latest tests, are as follows:-

- 1. The Remarkable Food Value of Bovril Itself. 2. The peculiar power of Bovril in enabling the system to extract greater nutriment from ordinary foods. 3. That these two properties together give Bovril a body-building power of from 10 to 20 times the amount taken. (See diagram.)

That is to say, Bovril is not only a great body-builder in itself, but it also enables other foods to feed the body more powerfully, and in protecting the system this important fact explains the value of Bovril in bringing up the defensive forces of the body to their highest power, and in protecting the system against the dangers of disease.

Used in over 2,000 Hospitals and Institutions.

A MYSTERIOUS QUEST.

CHAPTER XXIV.

A Fortune and a Death-Bed.

The lawyer sprang to the door with alacrity. As he did so, he heard a busting sound without, but when he had reached the hall, he found no one and had to call again and again before the horrid old woman, who seemed to be the sole owner and inhabitant of this establishment, appeared.

"A hundred dollars!" he repeated. "for a room without a carpet, a bed without sheets, a plate without food? If you get ten, you will do well. I am a lawyer, woman, and I have seen one like you before. Where are these gentlemen's clothes; and the watch that used to hang in that case, and the books that used to lie on that shelf?"

man showed such distress, that I paused astonished. "Tell your friend to stay," he pleaded in the lawyer's ear, but no so low I could not hear him. "He makes me think of the brother I lost years ago—a brother I loved. I cannot bear to see him go away. He makes me remember the days of my youth."

"I had bought a great bunch of white roses while I was out, and these I now brought forward and placed on his breast, with the remark that I thought he would like something beautiful to look at. "Instantly the tears welled in his eyes, and he moved his hands feebly and buried them among the blossoms."

The Surprises of An Hour.

"At this verdict of the doctor," resumed Mr. Degraw, of Cleveland, "an exclamation of sympathy left our lips. Only two hours in which to enjoy the possession of a fortune, after years of wearing penny and want. Only two hours in which to gauge his new responsibilities, and determine upon whom or what he would lay this burden of wealth otherwise useless to him. It seemed like mockery, and it awoke in me a feeling almost akin to fear. Though I laughed at the surmises of the lawyer, I knew that the mind of the man, thus driven into action at its weakest ebb and under the pressure of death, would be and must be necessarily influenced by the minds of those about him, and I refused such responsibility, and longed to escape from the scene and its possible consequences."

"But when I turned to look at the dying man, I felt that it would be cruelty for me to leave one who manifestly clung to me with such desperate and unreasoning persistence. He would not, in all probability, refuse my request if I entreated permission to go; would not, perhaps, lift his hand to stop me, if he saw me turn again toward the door, but I should never forget his look for all that, or feel comfortable at its remembrance. Whatever the result might be, I must linger till he himself said good-bye; for since we could not give him the peaceful and comfortable surroundings which he craved, we must at least grant him the sympathy and interest which might serve to make him forget his surroundings."

SHE HAD CONSTANT PAIN

Until Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"Before I started to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I suffered nearly all the time with headaches, backaches, and bearing down pains, and had a continuous pain in my left side. It made me sick if I tried to walk much, and my back was so weak that I was obliged to wear corsets all the time. But now I do not have any of these troubles. I have a fine strong baby daughter now, which I did not have before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

The mind is its own place, and in itself can make a Heaven of Hell, a Hell of Heaven.

"The mind is its own place, and in itself can make a Heaven of Hell, a Hell of Heaven." -Milton. Doubtless, you have heard many times, both from other folks' pens and mine, the essential philosophy of the above. It's the point of view that we take of our circumstances, and not the circumstances themselves, that does most to make us happy or unhappy—dissatisfied or contented. You have probably been told that again and again, and having common sense and reason of your own, knew it anyway.
