HIS REPENTANCE.

The Wheal Bang had come to its senses, and the worry was over. He, Barker, was upon confidential terms with all the shareholders, shook hands with them individually thrice a day. There would be no fuss, no bother; the affairs were being wound up in the most amicable manner, and Mark had but to come over without an hour's delay to help. The sooner they got it done, the sooner they would be free to turn their attention to other matters, and he, Barker, had a glorious thing in hand just now, safe to realize three thousand a year.

Such were the chief contents of the letter. Whether Barker believed in them fully himself, or whether he had dashed on a little coloring as to the simplification of affairs relating to the Great Wheal Bang, cannot be told. It may be that he feared hesitation on the part of Mark Cray and wished to get him at once over. In point of fact, Mark's presence was absolutely necessary to the winding-up.

Mark yielded without the slightest hesitation. If Mark Cray had confidence in any human being, it was Barker. He forthwith set about the arrangements for his departure. It would take more than the £-pound note to clear all he owed in Honiton; so he paid madame, and one or two trifles that might have been productive of a little inconvenience at the time of starting, and got away by the boat to Havre, and thence to London.

But oh! the treachery of man! When the steamer reached the metropolis, Mark Cray walked boldly ashore in the full glare of day, never so much as shading his eyes from the sun with those charming blue-hued spectacles you have heard of, never shrinking from the gaze of any mortal Londoner. Mark's confidence in the good-fellowship of the Wheal Bangs shareholders was restored, his trust in Barker implicit; if he felt a little timid on any score, it was connected with his clothes, which certainly did not give out quite so elegant a gloss as when they were spick and span new. Mark stood on the quay after landing, and looked round for Barker, who he had expected would be there to meet him.

"Cab, sir?"

"No," said Mark.

"I'll wait here a minute or two," decided Mark to himself. "Barker's sure to come. I wrote him word what time we might expect to be in—though we are shamefully late. He can't have been and gone again!"

Somebody came up and touched him on the shoulder. "Mr. Marcus Cray, I believe?"

Mark turned quickly. "Well?" said he to the intruder, a shabby-looking man.

"You are my prisoner, sir."

"What?" cried Mark.

"You are my prisoner, sir," repeated the stranger, making a sign to another man to come closer.

Mark hauled and kicked, and for a moment actually fought with his assailants. It was of course a senseless thing to do; but the shock was so sudden. He had felt himself as secure, stepping on these shores, as any proud foreign ambassador could have felt; and now to find himself treacherously pounced upon in this way was beyond everything bitter. No wonder that for a minute Mark was mad.

"It can't be!" he shrieked; "you have no warrant for this. I am as free as air; they wrote me word I was."

"Would you like a cab, sir?" inquired the official, civilly, but not deigning to answer.

"You can have one if you like. Call one, Tom."

A cab was called; the prisoner was helped into it and driven away, he was too bewildered to know where.

And that's how Mr. Mark Cray was welcomed to London. His rage was great, his sense of injury dreadful.

"Only let me come across Barker!" he foamed. "He shall suffer for this. A man ought to be hanged for such treachery."

Mark Cray was, so far, mistaken. Barker was as innocent in the arrest as he was. An accident had prevented is going down to meet the Havre steamer.

CHAPTER LIII.

THE GALLANT CAPTAIN HOME AGAIN.

Captain Davenal and his wife had been expected in England in December—as you have heard; but the time went on, and February was at its close before they arrived. They had been compelled to land at the Cape in consequence of the illness of Mrs. Davenal, and had to remain there some time. She had come into a very large fortune on the death of her father; a considerable portion of it was settled upon her, and the rest, a munificent sum, lapsed to her husband. So Captain Edward Davenal was once more at his ease in this world of changes.

Gay, handsome, free, sunny, it might have been thought that not an hour's care had ever been upon him. No allusion to a certain dark episode of the past escaped his lips when he and his sister met; there were no signs that he so much as remembered such a trouble had ever been. They were the present guests of Lady Reid, and would remain so for a short term. His leave of absence was for two years; but they did not care to be stationary in London the whole of the period. Sara was charmed with his wife; a gentle, yielding, pretty thing, looking so young as to be a girl still, and dividing her love between her husband and infant son, a fine young gentleman born at the Cape. A dread fear assailed Sara Davenal's heart as she looked upon her; for that curious matter touching the young woman who claimed to be connected with Captain Davenal had never been cleared up. Not since the previous December had Sara once observed her approach the house; but she had twice seen her in conversation with Neal at the end of the street, the last time being the very day of the arrival of Captain Davenal. It was altogether strange in Sara's opinion; if the young woman fancied she really had a legal claim of the nature she mentioned on Captain Davenal why had she not ascertained it openly? If she had no such claim, if she were an imposter, for what purpose had she put the claim forth? There had been no demand for silence money; no attempt at extortion. However it might be, Sara's duty was plain, now Captain Davenal had arrived, to acquaint him with the circumstances.

"I have some papers to give you," she whispered to her brother at Lady Reid's, the night of his arrival there.

"Papers? Oh, yes, I suppose so. I shall be with you to-morrow."

So he had not quite forgotten the affair. On the conclusion of the matter with Mr. Alfred King, Sara had sealed up certain papers and receipts, according to the written directions of Dr. Davenal; and these she waited to put into her brother's hand.

Mrs. Cray was with them still. She had taken to her bedroom entirely now, and was gradually dying. Mark was with her. His difficulty with the Great Wheal Bang's shareholders, and particularly with that one cautious shareholder who had saluted Mark so unpolitely on his landing from Havre was virtually over; Mark enjoyed his liberty of person again, and things were in process of adjustment. Miss Davenal so far overcame her repugnance to Mark as to allow him to be in her house, but it was only in consideration of Caroline's dying state. They could do nothing for her. They painted her clothes with iodine as she lay on the sofa day after day before the chamber fire; it was the only thing that brought any alleviation of the pain.

It happened that Captain Davenal's first visit to the house was paid at an opportune moment, in so far as that his interview with his sister was free from fear of interruption. Miss Davenal had gone to Lady Reid's to see and welcome the travelers, Neal in attendance upon her; and Caroline was asleep. Mark Cray was in the city; he had to go there frequently, in connection with the company and the concerns of the Great Wheal Bang.

Captain Davenal came in, all joyous carelessness, telling Dorcas, who admitted him, that she looked younger and handsomer than ever; and poor Dorcas—who was not young at all, and had never been handsome in her life—felt set up in vanity for a month to come. Sara was in the drawing-room. It was the first time of their being alone, and Captain Davenal held her before him and scanned her face.

"What has made you get so thin?"

"Am I thin?" she returned.

"Dreadfully so. I have been telling Dorcas that she's handsomer than ever, but I can't say the same of you. What is the cause, Sara?"

"I think people do get thin in London," she replied, with some evasion. "But let me be rid of my charge, Edward."

THERE'S MILLIONS IN IT.

How Electricity Has Increased Toronto Street Railway Business—The City's Profit.

TORONTO, Sept. 6.—The street railway earnings are beginning to show a phenomenal increase, and there is little doubt that after the conversion to electricity of the remaining horse car routes the revenue will go far above $1,000,000 yearly, which means the carrying of at least 25,000,000 people per annum, as compared with 16,000,000 as the maximum under the old system. The city treasurer received this morning a check for $7,514, being the city's share of $89,925, the company's earnings for August. The city's proportion in August, 1892, was $6,287.

THE CATTLE EMBARGO.

Its Serious Effects Felt at the Western Market—Hog Trade Increasing.

TORONTO, Sept. 6.—The embargo on the landing of Canadian live cattle in England, affected trade very little in the early part of the season, but has had a more serious effect latterly. The decline in receipts at the Western cattle market, the headquarters of export trade, has been very marked. Up to Sept. 1 the receipts of cattle for 1893 were 61,945, as compared with 66,400 in the corresponding period of last year. There was a decrease in the case of sheep, from 27,786 for 1892 to 21,600 for 1892. The hog trade is steadily increasing, the receipts for eight months this year being 38,351 against 37,061 for the same period last year.

CANADA TO THE FORE.

Great Exhibit of Cheese for the Final Competition at Chicago Promised.

OTTAWA, Sept. 6.—Prof. Robertson, Dominion dairy commissioner, reports that entries of cheese and butter for the World's Fair are coming in in large numbers. The great success which attended the exhibits of cheese in the June competition has stirred up those interested in this industry throughout the whole Dominion to do as well or better in the closing competition for the season in October. Probably one-half of the best cheese factories and butter factories in Canada will offer exhibits. A large number of exhibits of dairy butter from Quebec are being provided. Exhibits of butter and cheese will also be received from Manitoba to be sent to Chicago with those from the Maritime Provinces, Ontario and Quebec.

FLORA DAVIS TO WED A LORD.

New York Belle, With Chic Relatives, to Mary the Earl of Dufferin's Son.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—The marriage of Lord Terrence John Temple Blackwood, second son of the Earl of Dufferin and Ava, to Miss Flora Davis, of New York, is announced for the early part of October. The marriage will take place in Paris, and there will be four bridesmaids. The honeymoon will be spent at Walmer Castle, Lord Dufferin being lord warden of the Cinque Ports. Afterward Lord and Lady Torrence Blackwood will spend some time at Claudboro, near Belfast, the principal seat of the bridegroom's family. Miss Davis is one of the prettiest and most popular of New York belles. She is a niece of Mrs. Dr. Woodward, of Bellevue, this county. Her dower is $200,000, which sum must seem sufficiently noble even to an Irish lord who holds the archives of a long family line. Miss Davis' mother was formerly Miss Florence Chapman, of Bellevue, a sister of Mrs. Woodward, of Bellevue, and an aunt of Mrs. John Gardiner, jun., of this city, and of Mrs. Bell Asay, formerly of this city.

THE MODERN CURSE.

Modern civilization can boast of grand achievements in every department of art, science and mechanics. We enjoy advantages that were unknown to our progenitors, but we are cursed with certain diseases that never afflicted people of the olden times. Our modern civilization, with its disregard for the laws of health has brought upon us terrible sufferings. Torturing and agonizing rheumatism is, perhaps, the most dreaded of all the diseases of the present day. In either the acute or chronic form, there is great danger. The first indications of rheumatism call for the immediate use of Paine's Celery Compound. This treatment commenced in the early stages of the disease, will save much suffering. There is, however, a great hope for even those who have suffered for years from rheumatism. Paine's Celery Compound has cured thousands of men and women who were pronounced incurable by physicians. There is no other medicine to-day under the canopy of heaven that works so marvelously and faithfully for the rheumatic. Try its wonderful virtues, dear reader, and you will rejoice.

The question that confronts the fast young man is whether he will let up now or let down later.

A Wonderful Cure.—Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY, so I got a bottle and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the VEGETABLE DISCOVERY the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know." 3

The Bank of England was once compelled to suspend specie payments. It was on Feb. 27, 1792. It resumed in 1823, after the financial disaster following the French wars had passed away.

Give Holloway's Corn Cure a trial. It removed ten corns from one pair of feet without any pain. What it has done once it will do again.

It has been decided that hereafter, in the offensive equipment of British war vessels, the Maxim gun shall take the place of the five-barrel Nordenfeldt and Gardner guns.

A mans' wife should always be the same especially to her husband; but if she is weak and nervous, and uses Carter's Iron Pills, she cannot be, for they will make her "feel like a different person," at least so they all say, and their husbands say so too.

The characteristic of the Cyclopean style was its massiveness. The walls were composed of enormous blocks without cement.

We have no hesitation in saying that Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is without doubt the best medicine ever introduced for dysentery, diarrhœa, cholera and all summer complaints, sea sickness, etc. It promptly gives relief and never fails to effect a positive cure. Mothers should never be without a bottle when their children are teething.

CANADA'S NEW GOVERNOR.

A Reception to be Tendered Him at Liverpool—Conservative Praise.

MONTREAL, Sept. 6.—A special cable to the Star to-day says: Lord Aberdeen, the new Governor-General of Canada, will be tendered a reception by the mayor of Liverpool before embarking on the Sardinian to-morrow. The Daily Chronicle (Con.), referring to his departure, says: "Looking around among the public men of England available for such a high position, it is difficult, if not impossible to suggest a more fitting appointment."

THAT FRENCH FLAG.

Attention of the Consul to be Called to the Quebec Incident.

QUEBEC, Sept. 6.—L'Evenement, the principal French paper here, has a long article on an interview with Mr. Guy, the grocer whose French flag was pulled down from its hall yard, torn and trampled upon, and left in the mud until rescued by passers-by. Mr. Guy has not informed the French consul of the fact, but will do so in the morning. The same paper adds: "There is no doubt but that Admiral Hopkins, the distinguished commander of the Blake, will be the first to regret this regrettable incident."
