Angell Did.

(The New Republic, New York.)

Mr. Wilson's speech of acceptance ntained one sentence which overshadows anything that has been said or will be said during the campaign. In the years to come that sentence will surely gather a significance which has been ignored in the heat and haste and distraction of the moment. The statement that "no nation can any onger remain neutral as against any wilful disturbance of the peace of the world" is a doctrine the importance of which it is hardly possible to exaggerate. The fact that it is uttered now by the president of the most powerful neutral, by the president of a nation which has practised and preached international laissez-faire, is a reversal of such importance and with such endless consequences that it would absorb our attention if we had a just perspective on our own future. Whether the tariff should be moved up, down or sideways, whether t was wise or unwise to go to Vera Cruz, whether the eight hour bill is right or wrong are questions that will soon be forgotten, but the principle that neutrality is obsolete is the basis of organized peace in the world.

The idea was born simultaneously in many minds in different nations. It is imbedded in Mr. Asquith's declaration that Britain is fighting for the public law of Europe. It is the residue of truth in Mr. Roosevelt's agitation about Belgium. It is the idea behind the large movements for a league to enforce peace which has the general approval of Viscount Grey, M. Briand, and, it is said, of certain members of the German foreign office. The president's utterance was made not into a vacuum, but as a contribution to an international cause.

The particular words used by Mr. Wilson are worth noting. He speaks of neutrality as no longer possible. This attack on neutrality originated with a man who should have the credit for it. It originated with Norman Angell, and the words used by the president are Mr. Angell's own words.

Mr. Angell spent last winter in the United States lecturing and writing. Mr. Angell spent last winter in the In the weeks preceding the last crisis with Germany over the Sussex he formulated the doctrine that neutrality was obsolete. It emerged after hours of discussion on the basis of memoranda which were recast many times. The results reached the president, not only directly, but through his confidential advisers, and there can be no doubt that the most important sentence in Mr. Wilson's speech was written by Norman Angell.

The whole episode is interesting for its own sake. It is necessary to emphasize it in view of the report that the British government intends to deny Mr. Angell a passport and prevent him from returning to the United States. Leaving aside every consideration but the success of the British cause, it is a great blunder to keep Mr. Angell from the United States. He served his country and ours beyond all Englishmen who have come to us since the war began. Most of the semi-official visitors have hurt more than they have helped by their insensibility to America and their moral pretentiousness. But Mr. Angell quickly and effectively did an incalculable amount to convince leaders of American liberalism of their international responsibilities. He drew us closer to that England with which France died recently in the Derbying is possible.

Canadian Hero.

Graceful Tribute from the Duke of Devonshire.

A Canadian soldier wounded in France died this week in the Derbyshire Royal Infirmary, and the loneliness of his death so far from his home touched such a chord of human sympathy that his funeral yesterday with full military honors, proved an event of the greatest public interest. The streets were crowded with people as the cortege headed by the depot band of the Sherwood Foresters, and accompanied by a large detachment of men with a firing party, passed through the town.

men with a firing party, passed through the town.

Many wreaths were sent by people in various localities who had subscribed to make this last tribute of respect. The gallant soldier's name was William Moses Kedey, of Ontario, and among his papers was a Masonic certificate and a request from his lodge, in English, French and German, commending him to the tender mercies of any member of the craft among whom he might find himself.

This awakened the special sympathy of Derby Freemasons and many well-known brethren were among the mourners. The circumstances were brought to the notice of the Duke of Devonshire, provincial grand master of Derbyshire Freemasons, who at once directed that a wreath should be forwarded in his name and in the name of the province. Coming from Canada, this was an exceedingly graceful act.—Sheffield Herald.
