A Very Lame Defence.

THE esteemed Examiner, in its discussion of the "marriage question," manifests to a considerable extent that species of dialectical skill attributed by Goldsmith to the schoolmaster of Auburn, who, though vanquished, "could argue still." Our esteemed contemporary is pleased to state that we have "come to the rescue of Archbishop Cleary with an explanatory article." We beg to acknowledge the patronizing spirit which induces it to make this statement; but we must disclaim the motive attributed to us. Our "explanatory article" was for the benefit of the Examiner, which either wittingly or unwittingly, misinterpreted the Archbishop's words. To the ordinary honest mind, the Archbishop's pastoral needs no explanation; it is about as plain and direct as the English language could make it. Instead of thanking us for endeavoring to enlighten it, our esteemed contemporary answers in a vein of petulance and assumption. It is noteworthy that the Examiner does not claim to have any opinions of its own on the question under discussion; but that it is simply reechoing the opinions expressed by certain other newspapers throughout the Dominion. It is some satisfaction to find our contemporary thus far acknowledging the correctness of its position. This is exactly what we pointed out when we first referred to the Examiner's course in this matter. We showed that it was only blowing its little whistle in concert with the tooting of the larger anti-Catholic trumpets throughout the country. The Examiner says that its "interpretation of the mandate is precisely that of almost all the leading papers in the country which have commented upon it, and that several of these are French-Canadian and presumably under the editorial management of Roman Catholics." Then it goes on to say that if it is incapable of understanding plain English, or if it is dishonest so are they. What a splendid sample of virile argument! How it reminds one of the school boy who, when called to task for a misdemeanor, does not deny his guilt, but advances the plea that "you should punish the other fellows, for they are as bad as I am." Could anything sillier be imagined? But, in all seriousness, let us take the Examiner's statement at its face value and see what it is worth. It says that its interpretation of the pastoral corresponds with that of most of the leading papers in the country that have commented upon it, and that "presumably" some of these papers are under the editorial management of "Roman Catholics." It is quite possible the Examiner's interpretation may be in line with that of the Toronto Globe, famous from its earliest existence for its capacity to exploit every possible incident to arouse anti-Catholic prejudice; it largely depends upon this sort of thing for its existence. The Examiner's interpretation may accord with that of the Montreal Witness, the anti Catholic organ par excellence; or with that of the Montreal Star, whose code of morals is largely a matter of money and expediency. As to those papers "presumably under the editorial management of Roman Catholics" we know nothing; but we do know that the pastoral was interpreted by a number of "leading papers," the Catholicity of whose editors does not require to be determined by any exercise of "presumption." It was interpreted, among others by the Antigonish Casket, the Toronto Catholic Register, the London Catholic Record and the Boston Pilot. Does it require any presumption on the part of the Examiner to determine whether or not these papers are "under the management of Roman Catholics?" This is the company in which the HERALD finds itself in its interpretation of Archbishop Cleary's pastoral. Our esteemed contemporary will observe that we are not "alone." Is it customary for one sincerely desirous of knowing the truth, or seeking the solution of a problem he is incapable of understanding to have recourse to sources of information which he knows to be poisoned; or to seek guidance from those known to be bitterly prejudiced against the exponents of the truths in question? This, on its own confession, is "presumably" what the Examiner has done; for if it was incapable of understanding the pastoral of Archbsihop Cleary, and was in earnest about ascertaining its true intrepretation it would have consulted some of the authorities we have above indicated. The Examiner wants to know why we did not publish the pastoral in full. Well, there are several reasons why we did not do so. In the first place, scarcely a week passes but a pastoral, on some of the doctrines or practices of the Church, is published by one or other of the many Catholic bishops in Canada, the United States and other countries. Of such, with the exception of those issued by the Ordinary of the diocese of Charlottetown or an Encyclical of the Pope, we seldom publish any; for the simple reason that they are specially intended for the dioceses to whom they are addressed, and deal with questions that, in a general way, are understood by our readers. Then again, the pastoral of Archbishop Cleary, while it would have made most interesting and instructive reading was very long, and would have occupied seven or eight columns of our paper; more space than we could conveniently spare, without special cause. We trust these reasons will be satisfactory to our esteemed contemporary. But while we did not publish the whole pastoral, we in our editorial article, and our correspondent "Christian," made sufficient excerpts therefrom to make clear the Archbishop's position regarding the controverted points. New, let us see what the Examiner's own position is regardiog the publication of the pastoral. Our esteemed contemporary declares, and reiterates the statement, that it published the pastoral and takes great credit to itself, as is its wont, for having done so. We regret that we are obliged to contradict this statement. The Examiner did not publish "the mandate in full," so far as our observation has gone. It is true that it published a mere fragment of it; about one fifth of the whole document. Perhaps our esteemed contemporary presumed it had published the pastoral. From this we must "presumably" conclude that the Examiner undertook to discuss a document it had not read. This, indeed, is the most charitable interpretation we can give to its treatment of the question under review. Our only object in pursuing this discussion is to vindicate the truth, and if the Examiner finds itself in a somewhat awkard position it has itself to blame. The pastoral that has caused so much talk was issued to the people and clergy of the diocese of Kingston, and did not particularly affect the diocesans of Charlottetown. Its appearance was made the occasion of a great furore by certain journals that exploit every similar deliverance for the purpose of arousing better prejudice. The Examiner took up the refrain and, concealing its real animus, cast some very nasty insinuations upon the Catholics of this place. When brought to task it hopped round, after the manner of a jumping jack, from one position to another; so that at the present time we doubt if itself knows exactly where it stands in the matter.

WASHINGTON advices indicate that the experts of the Imperial, Canadian and United States Governments on the seal question have about concluded their conferences, and that they have come to an agreement on most of the propositions advanced by either side. After the experts should have concluded their labors it was intended that General Foster of the United States, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Louis Davies should meet and endeavor to agree on a basis of settlement. It is also announced that all the questions between Canada and the United States are to be submitted to a joint commission. The Laurier Government is famous for promising commissions on every conceivable question; but we have not yet seen any beneficial results from such sources. We trust that whatever they do, Canada's representatives at Washington will not give away Canada's whole case.

TELEGRAPHIC advices from Rome announce that the Pope's decision on the Manitoba school question was to be published today. It is stated that the decision affirms the right of the Catholics of Manitoba to separate schools and advises them persuasively, and by all peaceful methods to impress the justice and fairness of their temporarily lost cause on their fellow citizens of other faiths, and declares that Catholics must not attend public schools. They must, like Catholics everywhere, loyally and obediently support their own schools, even when the state refuses to assist. Of course, until the Pope's encyclical on the question is before us we can say nothing definite about the matter. There is, however, one very encouraging sign in connection with the affair. The editor of the Morning Organ has almost gone into a fit over the intelligence from Rome, and devotes a column of space this morning to abuse of the Pope. Poor fellow! We hope his Holiness will not find this out, for it might be the cause of his losing some sleep.

THE Atlantic mail contract entered into between the Dominion Government and the Beaver line of steamers, with St John as the Canadian terminus and Halifax as a port of call does not satisfy either St John or Halifax. The St. John people point out that the Dominion Government had previously subsidized the same line of steamers to the extent of $20,000 a season for fortnightly trips during the winter, and they claim that the Government could surely secure a good weekly service from the Beaver company for at least $70,000. Instead of that the Government gives them $146,000 to make weekly trips, calling at Halifax going and coming. They say, and justly, that the necessity of calling at Halifax after leaving St John causes a great delay in forwarding the freight to its destination. On the other hand the people of Halifax can scarcely see any great benefit to their city from making it the mail and passenger terminus; a mere port of call. It is claimed that by dividing the subsidy a good weekly service to and from both ports could have been secured.

"The Prosperous Dominion."

Discussing the visit of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to Washington and Canadian affairs generally, the New York Tribune of Saturday, under the headidg "The Prosperous Dominion" says "Sir Wilfrid Laurier has this one great satisfaction and source of strength, that he comes hither as the representative, not of a bankrupt and distressed nation, but of a particularly prosperous and progressive one. The present year will rank in Canadian annals as one of the best the Dominion has known. The Canadian farmers have fully shared the prosperity which good crops and high prices of wheat have brought to their neighbors on this side of the line. So great is their harvest that the railroad is overtaxed to carry it to the market. The dairy industry has also shown marked growth. In the production and export sale of poultry and fruit, great progress is likewise to be noted. As for mining, what has been done may be roughly estimated from the dimensions of the Klondike craze in the United States. There is reason to believe that for every dollar that has come or will come from the Klondike to this country, two dollars will find lodgement in the Dominion. Ano her equally important indication of Canadian progress is seen in the extension of lines of commerce, The proposed line of express steamers across the Atlantic has already been told of in these columns, rapid progress towards the completion of the scheme is being made. Practical steps are being taken for cutting a canal from the St. Lawrence at Montreal direct to Lake Superior, thus giving an unequalled route from the wheat fields of Manitoba to the ocean. No wonder that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is looking forward with confidence to the day when instead of ninety per cent. of Canadian trade going from United States ports, as at present, ninety per cent. of the trade of the northern States will go from Canadian ports. At the present rate of Canadian progress and of United States indifference such a change is entirely within the range of possibility, even of probability. As for the Canadian Pacific steamship service, it is already an established and successful fact, and there is every reason to expect that within the next few years the Canadians and Japanese will divide the carrying trade of that ocean between them, to the practical exclusion of the United States. In all this there is no possible ground for complaint against the Dominion. She is simply attending to business and promoting her own interests, as this country ought to do, but does not do. If the United States ports were as carefully looked after and improved as Canada,s ports are, they would have no cause to fear Canadian rivalry. It is a proper source of pleasure to the United States that Canada is prosperous. We do not want an impoverished and unthrifty neighbor. But it must be a cause of shame to this country, actually to be out-stripped by its smaller and less advantageously situated neighbor."

Newfoundland and Canada.

Despatches state that the Winter government of Newfoundland is likely to claim a share in any reciprocity negotiations that the Canadian government may be carrying on in Washington. The intervention of Canada when the Bond-Blaine treaty was under negotiation is cited as a precedent. It is not exactly correct that Canada interfered with the discussion of reciprocity in trade between Newfoundland and the United States. On that occasion the proposed concession to the United States involved free fishing in Newfoundland waters, and Canada claimed that the British North American fisheries ought to be considered together in any international dealings that affected the whole question. The scope of Sir Wilfrid's conference at Washington is not known, but if the discussion involves questions affecting the safety or value of the Newfoundland fisheries, that colony has a right to be heard. Even in trade negotiations Sir James Winter will have a right to know through the British ambassador if no other way is open, whether the interests of Newfoundland are affected. We are all one family.—St. John Sun.

ON Wednesday, December 8th, the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, His Lordship the Bishop of Charlottetown will dedicate the Church of All Saints at Cardigan Bridge. The sermon on the occasion will be delivered by Rev R. B. MacDonald the foremost pulpit orator in this Province. The church of All Saints has been enlarged and remodeled, and is today one of the most beautiful in the diocese. A collection in aid of the Church funds will be taken up during the ceremony. The parishioners cordially wish their friends to be present on the occasion, and contribute generously to aid the pious work.

THE schooner Santa Maria cleared on Saturday for Burmuda with a cargo consisting of 70 tons of freestone from Wallace quarries, 674 sacks white oats, 350 bbls. garnet potatoes, 200 bbls. white potatoes, 214 sacks McIntyre potatoes, 220 bundles pressed hay, 101 bundles pressed straw, 101 bushels turnips, 2 bbls oysters 40 drums codfish, 10 tubs factory butter, 3 carriages, 1 truck-waggon, 10 sets harness, 27 horses, 40 sheep, 15 live pigs, 400 geese, turkeys, fowls and ducks, 50 boat spars, 25 ladders. The horses were a fine lot—all good stylish drivers and cart horses,—young, ranging from 4 to 7 years old. These horses were examined by good judges when they were being put on board the schooner, and pronounced as fine a lot as has been shipped from Prince Edward Island for some time on one schooner. The shippers are H. C. Outerbidge, A. Horne & Co., and Dr. Bagnall. —Ex.
