SARTAIN'S MAGAZINE for September. Montreal: R. W. LAY, 193, Notre Dame Street.

This very ably conducted periodical has been upon our table for some days. It contains no less than forty articles, original and selected, all of them of very considerable merit; nor must we forget the pictorial embellishments, which are also of great interest as works of art; they are fifteen in number. How it is that so much talent—literary—should be brought to bear upon a work, can only be accounted for by the extent of its circulation; otherwise, three months.

[illegible] among other articles of [illegible], which we neglected to [illegible], we recur to "The Old Owl of the Abbey." Rev. James Abbott, of Methorpe, turns upon a long and much [illegible] of old English domestic jurisprudence, the Game Laws.

[illegible] Forest Laws of England, introduced by William the Conqueror and his successors, were oppressive, tyrannical, and unjust, can scarcely at present be denied by any one of the most strenuous defenders of "things as they were." The English Game Laws, upon which this tale turns, are the modified exponents of these old and now obsolete usages which the Normans introduced into Saxon England, but are in themselves, as they even now exist, by no means so prolific of crime as novelists and tale tellers would have us imagine. The reverend author of this historiette launches a bolt against these Game Laws, and though his story is well told, and displays considerable fertility of imagination, cramped and confined as he is to the narrow pages of a periodical, yet he fails to convince us that even the very game laws are, or ought to be considered, com-[illegible], when enclosed and protected [illegible] Scotland is called the "Policy" of a gentleman. Mr. Abbott's hero, or [illegible] rogues, are all intrinsically rascals, [illegible] plain that if no opportunity of poaching, or blackballing a stream, had [illegible] them, they would have become [illegible] and deliver" professors upon the [illegible] poaching has had a considerable [illegible] making men thieves and murderers, [illegible] but so has other infringements of the laws in a still more powerful degree. A love of dress leads to shop-lifting, and the burglar says "dead men tell no tales." Game, by the law of England, is lawful property, and so long as the law exists any infringement of it is punishable by statute, and though "Justice" who own preserves are sometimes very overhearing and extrajudicial when delinquents come before them, yet their gross proceedings cannot alter the broad principle which pervades all law, that private property must at all hazards be preserved and protected. We recommend our talented and reverend friend to draw this little tale out into a regular three volume story; he has left "ample room and verge enough" for such a purpose. For instance, he might keep as many of his original rascals alive as he pleased; he might [illegible] all, vagabonds and victims, to "the far West as he pleased—and [illegible] there, he might easily dodge the recesses of the forest through [illegible] half, and at last render perfect [illegible] to all concerned by hanging up [illegible] drama in the clefts of trees, to [illegible] bone by the carrion crows, and [illegible] daughters (who of course must [illegible] tiful, interesting, and dreadfully [illegible] things of dear old wicked papa, who [illegible] (and let them in everything) to the sons of the game-keepers whom the aforesaid papa had murdered. Nothing in the world is easier than to write a novel, and were it not that we are about to turn geologist, fired by the report of an "iron glass mountain or quarry," or something of the sort, mentioned the other day by our contemporary the Pilot as having been discovered by the Herald, we would set about writing the first chapter this very evening. But being so preoccupied, we must leave the task in what we after all conceive to be better hands—those of the author of "The Old Owl of the Abbey."

Great Exhibition of 1851.

On Friday, 18th July, the half-crown receipts at the doors of the Crystal Palace rose to £3,792 7s. 3d., and according to the police returns there were 35,382 persons who visited the interior.

On Monday 21st, the number of visitors was larger than it had been previously upon any Monday—amounting to not less than 70,640, making the total number of visitors from the opening of the Exhibition 2,429,625. The amount received on Monday was £3,244 12s.; of this sum six guineas were received for the sale of season tickets, the remainder having been taken at the door for shilling admissions.

On Tuesday 22nd, the receipts at the door amounted to £2,236 2s., and the number of visitors was, by the police returns, 68,161. Hitherto Tuesday had been the great day of the week, but it was not on the present occasion.

On Wednesday 23rd, the unfavourable state of the weather sent the receipts at the doors down to £2,438 14s., the number of visitors being only 58,529. Several charity schools were present, besides 150 of the Duke of Northumberland's people from Alnwick.

It is said that Mr. Hope has purchased, for 10,000 guineas, the splendid malachite vase shown in the Russian department of the Great Exhibition.

At Turin an expedition of 100 workmen is forming on subscription, who are to be forwarded to London to visit the Great Exhibition. Numbers of persons have offered their names. The King has graciously added a thousand francs to the list, which act is the subject of general approval.

Among the ladies who visited the Great Exhibition on Monday 21st was one who was so stout that none of the many entrances in the transept were wide enough to admit her, and she consequently had to enter through the door allotted to pianos and other heavy goods, at the west end of the building.

Mr. Robert Stephenson, who was appointed sole arbitrator in the case of Messrs. Munday—with whom, it may be remembered, the Society of Arts had entered into a contract for the purpose of providing the necessary buildings, &c., for carrying out the Great Exhibition—has just made his award. He has awarded to Messrs. Munday the sum of £9,130—the whole of the costs of the arbitration to be defrayed by the Society of Arts.

LOST ARTICLES.—The following is a return of things found in the Crystal Palace, which were delivered over to the custody of the Police, between the 1st of May and the 1st of July, and were at the last date still unclaimed by their owners:—" 271 handkerchiefs, 65 bracelets, 182 brooches, 118 parasols, 77 shawl pins, 4 bonnet shades, 14 silk and 9 cotton umbrellas, 46 veils and falls, 2 shirt studs, 57 catalogues and other books, 82 bunches of keys, 44 neck-ties, 1 pair of gloves, 8 lockets, 2 camp stools, 16 victorines, 1 pair of slippers, 10 ladies' cuffs, 1 pendulum, 2 coats, 3 card cases, 15 brequet and other chains, 3 knives, 3 pincushions, 28 pairs of gloves, 25 walking sticks, 10 pair of spectacles, 16 pencil cases, 12 eye glasses, 3 umbrella cases, 4 rings, 3 fans, 1 silver watch and guard, 1 opera glass, 2 toothpicks, 1 thimble, 30 reticules and baskets, 14 shawls, 2 boxes, 1 petticoat, 2 carpenters' rules, 1 Prussian $5 note, 2 scent bottles, 1 purse, 6d.; 1 do, 1s.; 1 do, 2s. 7d.; 1 do, 2s. 6d.; 1 do, £5 9s. 4d.; 1 do, 5d.; 1 do, 11d.; 1 do, 6s. 3d.; 3 empty do; cash found, £2 10s. 0½d." This miscellaneous list, it is amusing to observe, shows that the weaker sex are much more careless of their property than men, for it will be seen that the greater number of the articles enumerated are female paraphernalia.

FIREMEN'S PIC NIC EXCURSION TO ROUSE'S POINT.—On Thursday morning last, at 8 o'clock, six of the city Fire Companies, viz.: Montreal, Neptune, Queen, Union, Hook and Ladder, Rescue, No. 1, and a goodly number of our citizens, with an excellent Brass Band, embarked on board the Prince Albert for Laprairie, and there took the cars for Rouse's Point, which place they reached about noon. The Fire Companies, with the exception of Reserve No. 1, proceeded to a wood, adjacent to the railway station, and partook of an excellent lunch, provided by themselves. The rest of the party (about 80) sat down to dinner at the hotel, provided by the proprietor, Mr. Dunton, in a style not excelled by any hotel-keeper in Montreal, which is saying a great deal.

After dinner, the hotel party joined their friends in the wood, where all united in adding to each other's amusement. What with foot-ball, playing at cricket, the swing, leap-frog, dancing, &c., &c., the time passed off so pleasantly, that the party could hardly be got together to return home. At five o'clock, the Fire Companies marched in procession through the village, the Band playing Yankee Doodle, and returned to the railway cars, in which they embarked for St. Johns and Laprairie. At the latter place, they were delayed some time, waiting the arrival of the Lake Champlain passengers, but finally arrived in Montreal at 11 o'clock, P. M., very much pleased with their excursion.

The Band, both going to and returning from Rouse's Point, performed many favorite airs, pleasing alike to their hearers, and creditable to themselves. It was formed by Mr. George Nunn of the city, for this and similar purposes. A Piper, named James M'Donald, formerly of the 71st, played alternately with the Band, and added considerably to the pleasure of the whole party.—Pilot.

New Wheat and Barley were brought into the New Hope Mills by Mr. John Wilkinson, of Puslinch, on the 31st July. This, we believe, is almost unprecedented, and would lead us to believe that they are a more early cereals when still advertised in Puslinch.—Gall Reformer.

The Springfield (Massachusetts) Republican contains an account of a murder, at Battleboro, Vermont, on Monday evening. Thomas Hall, a French Canadian, called at the house of Peter Rogers, and insisted upon staying there, to which Moore objected and pushed him out. Hall then attacked Moore, ripping open his abdomen with a knife, and severing several arteries, which caused his death in a few hours. Hall has been arrested and bound over. There are reports of other provocations by Moore, whose character was not good, but they do not appear in the report of the coroner's inquest.

THE PETERHOFF STEAM YACHT—SKILL AND PERSEVERANCE.—This fine vessel, built by Mr. Mare, at Blackwall, and fitted with engines by Messrs. George and Sir John Rennie, to serve as an Imperial yacht to the Emperor of Russia, and which went, when on her passage to St. Petersburg, on the rocks off the Island of Gessel, in October last, has been recovered, and is now in the Import-Dock of the East-India Company at Blackwall, apparently in as good a state as before the accident, with the exception of the wood panelling of the cabins, which has yielded to the ill-treatment it received and long immersion under water; but the hull and engines are as good as ever. The following details may prove interesting:—Various attempts were made by the Captain and crew of the vessel to get her off, assisted by some officers and men sent by the Russian Government, but without success. The vessel stuck fast on the ridge of rocks with a hole in her bottom, and, being constructed of iron, she was abandoned by the Russian authorities to the agent of the company in London who had insured her, and the company sent out an able officer—Captain Fell—who after great exertions succeeded in getting her off the rocks. He let the water into every part of her, and allowed her to remain full all the winter. This bold experiment had the effect of preserving her from being battered by the winter storms, and in the spring the vessel was pumped out, and after being partially repaired, he floated her to Riga, where she underwent a more thorough repair. He then tried the engines and found that they worked well, and on trying the speed of the vessel at the measured mile, near Riga, the result was ascertained to be 16 knots an hour. From Riga Captain Fell proceeded with the vessel to Elsinore, and from Elsinore to Hamburg, where he lay for a short time, and then left for England, and although he had to contend against a strong head wind during the last 200 miles, showing the average speed of the vessel during the voyage to be at the rate of upwards of 13½ knots per hour.—Times, 17th ult.

Shipping Intelligence.

The steamer Rowland Hill, Capt. Jeans, returned from her pleasure trip to the Saguenay and River du Loup this morning. She reports having seen but two or three inward bound vessels—one of them a deep ship, which was off Green Island yesterday, and supposed to be a Montreal trader. The brig Salisbury Harrison, Britain, hence for Grimsby, was spoken on the 20th ultimo, 35 days from Quebec, and supplied with bread by the ship Caledonia, Allan, at this port.
