WAR SUMMARY

THE DAY'S EVENTS REVIEWED

THE Russians in eastern Galicia have won further successes and have begun an advance against Halicz. Their renewed assaults on the line of the Narayuvka River enabled them to capture and to hold the heights west of Presovce, the Villages of Labrikovce and Travoltloki, and heights east of Godov. Other positions carried by them in the first onrush returned to the enemy's possession after sharp fighting. They defeated in this sector a powerful German counter-attempt, made with large masses of men and armored motor cars. In the Stanislau region, south of Halicz, the Russians have begun to converge on Dolina. They captured foe trenches in the Jamnica-Pasechna sector, defeated a hostile column, and occupied Sviniuchy. Russian river boats destroyed mine barriers in the Pina River, in the region of Pinsk.

* * * * * *

The foregoing news shows that the Russian army is full of vigor. Prince Lvoff, the Russian premier, declares his confidence in the fighting ability of the army and in the adequateness of the munitions supply for the immediate future, but he recognizes that the transportation difficulty, an inheritance from the old regime, still resists complete solution, but he believes that it will be solved. The food situation has improved, and unless the harvest is especially bad, Russia is absolutely secured against hunger for the rest of the year. He has news of a marked improvement in the internal situation, of a rallying of the people around the government.

* * * * * *

Von Hindenburg and the kaiser have called a hasty council of war at Berlin. The sudden display of Russian strength has dismayed the enemy and upset his calculations. On the whole eastern front he has 130 divisions. Of these 46 hold the front between the Carpathians and the Pripet River. These face the Russian armies on the offensive. North of the Pripet River the Germans are guarding a 500-mile front to the Baltic with only 43 divisions of landsturm and other units of his poorest troops. In Rumania the enemy has maintained 32 divisions on a front of a little more than 100 miles. Military observers declare that the foregoing force is too weak for the holding of a 1000-mile front.

* * * * * *

The French, in aerial raids with 84 machines, dropped 32 tons of high explosives in Essen, Treves, Coblenz, Ludwigshafen, and other cities in the industrial province of Westphalia, far over the German border. The airmen made especially good hits on the Krupp munition works, the Treves central railway station, and a munition factory at Ludwigshafen. Seven fires broke out at Treves. The British, raiding important points far behind the German lines, made it a terror and a nightmare for the enemy. Their bombs hit munition depots, bivouacs, railways, and other targets. The Germans dropped bombs on London, killing 37 persons and causing a great clamor to arise for reprisals and better anti-aircraft defences. Enemy aircraft also shelled a French hospital near Nancy, killing three persons.

* * * * * *

The Canadians are steadily moving forward their outposts in the no man's land on the southern part of their front. Twelve Canadians, in an outpost affair, attacked and defeated at least 50 Germans, taking one prisoner. The Germans have begun to fire more gas shells than usual at the Canadians and the Canadian gunners repay them in kind at a high rate of interest.

* * * * * *

The French won an important defensive battle in the region of Laffaux Mill, north of the Aisne, when they defeated strong German attacks at four points. West of the Meuse they gave the enemy a bad shock when they captured three strong salients. One of these was in Le Mort Homme region and the two others were near Hill 304. The French also enlarged a captured position near Ailles, east of Cerny.
