SMART FRENCH LINGERIE SUIT

BY HENRI MANUEL, PARIS, 1911.

This stunning costume is to be the first importation for the summer season. It was designed by Paret, the well-known French modiste. Our illustration is from a photograph made in Paris

The suit, although called "lingerie," is a strictly tailored effect with 26-inch semi-fitting coat.

It is developed in linen batiste, with alternating panels of the batiste hand-tucked and separated by panels of lace. This lace is hand-made torchon, in Greek key pattern and the embroidery shows the Madeira eyelet work in combination with buttonhole scallops and heavy padded relief patterns. The jaunty little coat is semi-fitting and opens with broad graceful shawl revers. The sleeves are kimono cut. The skirt is fashionably narrow and mounted on a high empire belt.

"I am pleased to meet you, Miss Smith," said Dick, shaking hands ceremoniously. "Are you any relation to the Smiths who live in Brooklyn?" They both laughed, and Dick resumed, "But, honestly, I am delighted to meet you."

In spite of its burlesque, it was so much like a formal introduction that for a moment they were silent, and then the girl said: "Isn't it odd how little it takes to amuse a human being? Here we have been either talking utter nonsense or else we've been saying the usual things in the usual way, and yet it has been rather interesting."

"Not so fast," cried Dick, seeing an opportunity for discussion. "You have accidentally stumbled on the foundation of social relations. It is not what is done in the world that makes us thrill, it is what we do ourselves. There is nothing original about ham and eggs, and yet if you were to cook the ham and eggs, and I were to help you eat them, it would be an unforgettable feast. It is the 'oneness' of the situation which makes it delightful."

The girl smiled, but he noticed that the curtains were drawn a shade closer across her frank eyes. "I did not intimate that it was delightful," she said. "I merely remarked on the easy standard by which we measure amusement."

"That's right, be consistent; if you fail to rub it in completely the first time, try, try again. Do you reside in the neighborhood?"

"I don't live so very far—just a pleasant walk."

"I'll swear it would be. When you start back I shall go along and make the test."

Again the smile, again were the curtains drawn, and this time she rose, saying, "Oh, no, indeed. And, come to think of it, I must hurry home at once. I must see what has become of Bayard."

"Bayard is all right. At the rate he was going when last seen, I have no hesitancy in saying that he has arrived at his destination, no matter where it was. I want to get better acquainted. Do you do the society much?"

"Oh, no, I—I am a poor girl, you know," she replied, seating herself once more.

Dick made a critical examination as he replied: "You wear no rings; but that may only be a sign of good sense. Your clothes are not very trimmy either, but that also may only be another sign of good sense. But that collie with the pedigree and the bench ribbons—that is neither a sign of good sense nor of poverty."

"The dog was a gift," answered the girl; "but what do you mean about my clothes not being trimmy?"

"Well, they haven't any of this uniform stuff on them, nor a lot of that fluffy-flop-doodle dubdub, and——"

"Do you mean that this dress is not becoming?" demanded the girl, as she tried to pull the skirt a little farther over her walking shoes.

"Goodness, no! I trust I am not an arrant coward, but neither am I absolutely reckless. Your dress is so becoming that it just suits you. It is as a pleasing frame for a perfect picture. It seems part of you, in fact. Why, until a moment ago I was not aware that you had a dress, on. Now I see that the reason was——"

"Never mind the reason. A man's reason is seldom interesting. It is a slow, dreary, painful——"

"Slow?" interrupted Dick. "Why, seems to me——"

"Never mind. I have no hope that you will know any more about seams than you do about fit and trimming. We will not discuss it further."

"Just like a woman! They make a lot of harsh statements and then say, 'We will not discuss it further.'"

"And you are just like a man. They always preface every rude remark with 'That is just like a woman.' Now I really must be going."

She rose as though the interview was ended, and this time Dick also stood up. "When am I to see you again?" he asked a little wistfully.

"How can I tell?" she repined, and there was a new delicate shading to her voice also. She had found this stranger refreshing, and even youth sometimes has an intuitive instinct to cling to its happy moments. "Maybe this evening, maybe tomorrow, maybe—never. You are strange enough to stand as a type of your sex; first you call Bayard a shepherd dog, then you gaze on charming costume for hours, and have the effrontery to say that you did not know I had one on; and, literally, you admire bulldogs. I fail to see anything attractive in the list of your accomplishments."

"You get discouraged too easily. These attributes you have mentioned are not accomplishments; they are——"

"They are certainly not attractions," interposed the girl. "What are they?"

"Well, I must say that you have a free, easy way with you, all right."

"That is like a man again. Always he pretends that he is eager for the truth, but always he chooses flattery."

"I couldn't quite help being a man, you know," protested Dick. "Some of us have greatness thrust upon us. But to return to the list of traits. Suppose we call them vices? Wouldn't you like to reform some one so that there may be a star in your crown?"

"Yes, indeed! But I prefer better material to work on. Here I have wasted hours on you and you do not show the slightest improvement."

"That is the second time you have dragged in the word hours, as though we had been marooned on a desert reef for half a lifetime. Now, the time hasn't been so tedious with me. It has danced along like one delicious moment."

"That was really quite decently said, and I must forgive most of your former crudities; but really I must hurry away."

"Before you go," said Dick as a last resort, "I want you to shake hands with Mulligan and make the amende honorable."

"I could never bring myself to touch the creature," cried the girl. "I fear he would bite me."

"That is rank affectation. You know perfectly well that every bulldog dotes on petting. Why, you could put your hand down his throat and tickle the roots of his tongue, and he would only grin about it."

"What a delightful privilege!" she mocked. "But I can't quite believe it."

"Nonsense! Come now, and shake hands with him. He's a sensitive soul, in spite of his rugged build."

Dick seated himself on the bench and took Mulligan's broad head between his hands. The girl walked over to them and held out a firm brown hand. The dog was in the act of offering his paw when she suddenly straightened and said decisively: "I must really go at once! No, do not try to detain me, I positively must go. Good afternoon."

Giving him no time for a reply she turned and entered the tangled path, walking hastily in the direction from which she had come. Dick gazed after her in helpless surprise for a moment, and then he heard a slight sound behind him. Turning, he saw his three friends, and on each face, even on Ivan's, was a knowing grin

CHAPTER VI.

Miss Burton at the Wheel.

Blessed is the privilege of friendship. After a man is one's friend, it is no longer necessary to regard the little whims and fancies about which one may be sensitive; while, on the other hand, one may be sure that if one arrives at an inopportune time, the fact will not be long kept a secret. Dick's expression conveyed none of the warmth of welcome, nor did his words present the formal courtesy for which the Oriental is noted. With simple directness and with some little heat, he demanded: "What the dickens do you fellows want, anyway?"

"If we had guessed that you had a tryst, we should not have intruded," answered Lorrain, blandly. "But why did you not present us? The young lady was charming."

"Young lady?" returned Dick. "What young lady? That's not a young lady; that's merely a poor girl of the neighborhood. She's been taking her prize-winning collie out for a walk. I thought you were going to plan a campaign while I took Mulligan for a work-out. I told you I should join you before three. The poor thing was sadly in need of exercise."

Lorrain laughed as he put his hand on Dick's shoulder. "Ah, Richard," he said, "you may become a great commander, a great orator, or a great politician, but never a great diplomat. The poor Mulligan gets but little of the much-needed exercise, shaking hands with a poor girl of the neighborhood. And what need of a revolution, or even a revolution, when the poor girls, wearing exquisite walking gowns, take their prize-winning collies out for exercise? It is now after four o'clock, and where is the collie?"

"The collie was a gift. When I said poor girl it did not necessarily imply that she was a slum-dweller. There are graduating levels in poverty. We don't go from golden pheasant to a dry crust in one jump. To the richest man all other men are poor, to the poorest, all other men are rich." Dick was forgetting his irritation in making a path for some of his pet theories. "Now, the main thing is not so much the amount of a man's fortune in its abstract, but in comparison with that of other men. We must not lose sight of the fact that——"

"That Mulligan needs exercise," interjected Lorrain, laughing.

"How can you interrupt with nonsense about a dog?" demanded Ivan, who had been warming his hands at Dick's little blaze. "He has just made a strong point. It is, indeed, not the size of the fortune which counts, but its comparative size."

"That is the whole thing in a nutshell," corroborated Hall. "Man does not select the most comfortable scale on which to live, constantly he is striving to accumulate more in order that he may be on the same scale as the one a little richer than himself live. This is found in unhappiness to result. Take this country for instance. In eighteen hundred the millionaires only numbered——"

"Hall, will you kindly desist!" protested the count. "Always you make me feel like a blackboard. Never do you miss a chance to put a lot of figures on me. Man does not live by statistics alone. And you, Richard, are getting so that you can no longer converse you must have a new thing for a grand oration. And Ivan so constantly throws suffering humanity in my face that I can taste it. I do not greatly enjoy the taste of suffering humanity."

"Nothing do you seem ever anxious to labor for," chided Ivan. "Ivan's world was a vast altar, and he spent his life in religious sacrifice. Most of us speak glibly of universal love, but it is generally an idea, not an emotion, and the very man who will be in a panic of sympathy when one of his own pinches a finger, will read of a hundred men shot up in a burning mine—and forget about it five minutes after. The social conscience marks the highest level to which man has so far advanced; but it is still too isolated to create an epidemic. Ivan was a sensitive man, and all the anguish waves of this little round world brought their throbs to his tender heart. His was a beautiful character, but it must be confessed that a streak of humor would have increased his charm as a companion.

Ham salad is good made as follows: Grate some cold boiled ham and add some chopped celery. Mix in some mayonnaise dressing and serve on lettuce leaves, adding a spoonful of mayonnaise on top of each serving.

Never keep a nurse with any nervous ticks, such as biting the nails and fidgeting with the hands or feet, for children are very quick to notice and copy these failings; and habits learned in this manner are most tiresome to cure.

If a polished knitting needle is dipped into a pail of milk and withdrawn, to be held upright, some of the milk will adhere to the needle if the fluid is pure. Even the smallest amount of water will keep any of the milk from adhering.

Many vegetables may be seasoned with salt pork or bacon. Salt pork fat is by some considered to render a better flavor to fish, veal, poultry and game. Fat from the soup kettle is good to warm potatoes, make sauces or cook meat in.

To touch up an old and faded rug, get dyes of the various colors in the rug and a number of camel's hair brushes. Dissolve a little of each dye in boiling water, and, after the rug has been well cleaned, paint the dyes on where they are needed.

White furniture and woodwork can be beautifully cleaned with whiting. Wring a flannel cloth from hot water, dip it in the dry whiting, and rub well to remove all stains. Then wash off the whiting with clean warm water, and dry with a soft cloth. The rubbing strokes should always be in the way of the wood.

A very simple method to keep the hands in good condition is to wash them frequently after work that soils them much with soap and hot water, partly dry them, then rub in a few drops of glycerine and ammonia. These should be mixed in equal parts and kept in a small bottle, well shaken before using.

Often there is a little difficulty in turning cakes, especially gingerbread, out of the tin. This difficulty may be overcome by greasing and dredging a little flour over the tin before adding the mixture. Then, after taking it from the oven, stand the tin on a damp cloth for a minute or two before removing the cake.

Dear Miss Grey: My eyelids matter and are thin. Please advise.—Mildred.

A.—Wash lids clean each morning and evening with hot borax water. Rub in ointment as follows: Ammoniated mercury, 1 part; vaseline, 100 parts. Drop two drops of this solution in each eye: Sulphate of zinc, 1 part; pure water, 300 parts.

Dear Miss Grey: 1. What sort of a wrap is appropriate to wear with black beaver hat trimmed with plumes and a touch of gilt? 2. Is a suit proper for a woman of 40? 3. How do you use ammonia and peroxide to remove superfluous hair?—Constant Reader.

1.—1. A long half-fitting black coat. 2. Yes. 3. Use them alternately daily.

Dear Miss Grey: What will take apple stains out of India linen?—Mrs. C. S.

A.—It is almost impossible to remove fruit stains after hot water has been unsuccessfully used, but sometimes alcohol will do it.

8880. LADY'S CORSET COVER.

A well-named corset cover of simple construction is here illustrated. The raglan-shaped sleeves trimmed with lace are an attractive feature, but they may be omitted. The pattern provides for either tucks or gathers in the front, and a tape inserted in a casing at the waist line adjusts the fullness of the waist. The materials used for these garments are linen, batiste, lawn, dimity and China silk. The pattern is cut in six sizes, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 inches bust measure. It requires 1¼ yards of 36-inch material for the medium size. A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10c in silver or stamps.

Her Face and Body Were Litterly Covered With "BOILS."

Burdock Blood Bitters Cured Them.

Mrs. John H. King, Johnston, N.B. writes:—"Last summer I was very much troubled with boils, and my face and body were literally covered with them. A friend advised me to take Burdock Blood Bitters. I got three bottles, and before I had taken all the first one my boils began to go away. I had just taken a few doses out of the last one when they all disappeared. My husband has also used Burdock Blood Bitters with much benefit."

Boils in themselves are not a dangerous trouble, but still, at the same time, are very painful. They are caused entirely by bad blood, and to get rid of them it is necessary to put the blood in good condition, and for this purpose there is nothing to equal that old and tried remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters.

VEILING JEWELS.

The fashion of veiling has been extended to the veiling of jewels. It is the fad in London to wear all the pendants and brooches of precious stones that one can muster, and then hide their glitter under a veil of chiffon, so they appear as a glowing part of the underdress.

The Oriental embroideries and garnitures which were used in the early spring have reappeared also with this veiled effect, and they are very beautiful when their eastern vividness of color is partly obscured by veilings of dark blue in definite mode or grey.

Gowns of gold or silver tissue or trimmed with broad gold or silver embroideries are veiled with chiffons and voiles. Even valuable old lace trimmings or evening gowns are only suggested, for they, too, are partly covered by thin veilings.

POTATOES WITH EGGS.

Potatoes have the culinary virtue of being infinitely variable. For instance, when boiled and baked and fried they have become a little wearisome, and the home tubers are no longer young enough to carry a sauce gracefully, try them baked with eggs. For a moderate-sized dish in this style you will need four cold-boiled potatoes and six hard boiled eggs, all cut in slices about a fourth of an inch thick.

Put a layer of the potatoes in the baking dish, which must be well buttered, seasoning with salt, or salt and pepper, and cover with a layer of the eggs. Repeat this, and pour over the result two cups of thin white sauce. Cover with cracker crumbs soaked in butter and bake until brown on top.

TWO MEET DEATH IN BOARDING HOUSE

Overheated Stovepipe Caused a Fierce Fire in Montreal Home.

Montreal, Feb. 13.—Fire caused by an overheated pipe cost two lives in the boarding house of Joseph Phillips, aged 70, of Prince street. The dead are Michael McMahen, aged 47, and Phillips himself.

John Quinlan, who had retired to rest fully dressed, was almost suffocated when he awoke to find the house in flames. The heat was so intense, and the smoke so thick, that Quinlan made a hurried escape through one of the windows on the stairway, and raised the alarm. Quinlan's face and hands were badly burned.

When the brigade arrived the fire was quickly extinguished. Groping their way through the house, the firemen discovered the dead bodies of Phillips and McMahen and also the body of Mrs. Phillips, aged 70, who was lying unconscious on the dining-room floor.

She was taken to the General Hospital, where her condition is considered serious.

DOUBLE FUNERAL FOR MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

Illness of Each Partly Responsible for Other's Death.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Windsor, Feb. 13.—A double funeral was held from SS. Simon and Jude's Church, Belle River, this morning at 9:30 for Mrs. Alexandrine Ladouceur and her daughter, Lucy, who died on Saturday morning, following her mother's death in two days. The remains were placed side by side in the village cemetery.

The mother's death was due to a dose of poison which she took about a week ago. Together with the worry of her daughter's long standing illness and her own poor health, Mrs. Ladouceur became despondent. The young woman's death, it is said, was due to a certain extent to the shock caused by the mother's act. The family is highly respected and well known in Windsor.

Joseph Ladouceur, the husband, was former reeve of Rochester Township, and also at one time held the office of township treasurer.

Besides the husband and father, four sons survive. They are Armand J., Detroit; Aurele, at home; Ferdinand, employed at the Home Bank, in Belle River, and Ravi, with the Home Bank of Canada, of Sandwich. Mrs. Frank Ladouceur's father, Cleo Cleophas, and a sister are also living.

A ROMAN MYSTERY.

Rome, Feb. 11.—Unusual interest has been excited in the mystery surrounding the disappearance of Henry L. Today Frederic Crownin Shields, director of the academy, offered a reward of $100 for the discovery of Wolfe dead or alive.

HEROES REWARDED

Prisoners Who Helped Wrecked Passengers Will Be Released.

Toronto, Feb. 13.—Four prisoners, who while on their way to prison from Owen Sound, worked like heroes to liberate the passengers when the train was wrecked at Mono road on Jan. 17, will be pardoned.

The Minister of Justice has written from Ottawa to H. G. Tucker, barrister, of Owen Sound, stating that he will recommend that they be liberated at once.

The prisoners were being taken to the Central Prison on the train, and when released from their shackles made no attempt to escape, but went to the assistance of the passengers.

The latter signed a petition for remission of the sentences of the four men, and the minister's action is in response to this petition.
