A few minutes after two o'clock the visitors began to arrive at the dock and boarded one of Capt. Foster's boats which was to convey the party as far as Springbank. After waiting until twenty minutes to three the boat started down stream, but before it had gone many yards some one on board noticed Ald. Wallace sauntering down Dundas street under the grateful shelter of a large umbrella. The engines were reversed and the boat stopped until the veteran alderman was rowed alongside. As he leaped upon the steamer's deck Commissioner Essery led off with three hearty cheers for the admiral, in which all enthusiastically joined. Ald. Luney was then announced as waiting for the boat on the dock, and after he was accommodated in a similar manner as the other straggler the steamer was once more headed down stream, and the trip to Springbank was begun in earnest. The following were noticed among those on the decks: Mayor Taylor, Chief Williams, Aldermen Moule, Anderson, Dreaney, Boyd, Heaman, Shaw, Fitzgerald, Wallace, Luney and Thomas; Trustees Yates, Allaster and Craig; Principal Woods, Inspector Boyle, J. A. Nelles, Moses Masuret, J. W. Little, Assistant Superintendent Williams, of the C. P. R., Station Master Houston, Messrs. John Cameron, J. S. Barron, W. Thornton, A. G. Smyth, C. E. Keene, Hugh McLean, Colonel McBeth, J. S. Pearce, Water Commissioner Essery, Fred Henry, F. Guest, C. F. Complin and Chairman George Davis, the last named being attired in a faultless-fitting black silk shirt with tie to match.

Engineer Tracy met the visitors at Springbank, and after a short rest Chairman Davis and Commissioner Essery marshaled the party into squads and, headed by the chairman, a dash was made for the trenches. For the most part they were found to be out through hilly ground, and as the surface rose the diggers had a corresponding depth to reach, several of the stretches being excavated to the depth of eighteen feet. The digging in some spots has been unusually hard, some of the larger stones having to be burned out. An eighteen-inch tile has been laid for some distance, and sufficient earth thrown in to prevent any accident happening to it. The majority of the men are now employed in the Colville property, which has presented the most formidable barrier to the work. Here a miniature forge and a blacksmith are kept constantly employed in sharpening the blunted tools. In one or two places the workmen have been compelled of necessity to dig to a greater depth than the level required in order to strike a clay bottom to lay the tiles upon. After the clay is reached the ditch has to be made up to the required level with the clay. In other places a cold stream of water registering about 40 degrees and mounting half way up to the workmen's knees makes their position anything but enviable. The total length of the ditch is about half a mile, and after traveling the entire distance and closely inspecting the work the visitors came out on the road at Byron.

The return trip was made up the river bank as far as the outlet of the lower Colville spring, which registered 48 degrees. Most of the party took a long draught of the cooling water and then took up the weary tramp across the fields on the top of the bank. Midway between Byron and Springbank the commissioners asked the company into a pretty grove of maples, where suitable refreshments were waiting.

Mayor Taylor, Chief Williams, Aldermen Wallace and Anderson and Dr. Wolverton failed to respond when the provisions were served and a search warrant was issued for them, but without the desired result. Commissioner Essery then gave a war-whoop in true Indian style, and the lost members of the party appeared one after another and joined the festive group in the grove. The refreshments having been disposed of and the grateful rest in the shady grove enjoyed, the homeward march was taken up, and all arrived at theboat in safety, and made the return trip to the city without incident.

The most popular man at Springbank shortly after 8 o'clock was City Chamberlain Pope, who was relieved of several hundreds of dollars in a few minutes by the men engaged on the works.

The present indications are that the springs will yield about 1,000,000 gallons per day.
