Hockey

Campbellton Won.

The Victorias of Campbellton defeated the Chatham hockey team 5 to 4 in a test game of hockey in Campbellton last night.

The Ring

Pugilist Dead of Disease.

It has been determined that John Goldberg, a young pugilist who was severely beaten in a bout at the Sharkey Athletic Club, New York, on last Wednesday night by Chicago Jack, and who died in the Bellevue Hospital, was a victim of congenital malformations of the whole glandular system—a malady which is not common.

Dr. Lehane, who conducted an autopsy, found no marks upon the body to indicate any severe results from the fight, and the skull had not been fractured. Dr. Lehane said that he did not see how anybody could be blamed.

Goldberg lived with his mother and stepfather, Morris Goldberg, a cobbler, at 526 East Thirteenth street. He was twenty-three years old. He took the earnings of his fights to his mother.

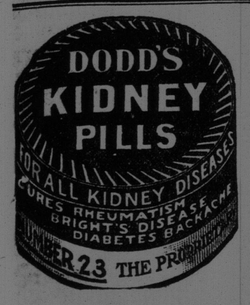
Sandy Ferguson Again.

There should be plenty of excitement at the West End club, Boston, this week, says the Boston American. Sandy Ferguson, who resides in Chelsea, will meet Morris Harris of Philadelphia who is as black as Jack Johnson. Ferguson has been doing some hard training since he returned from his short "vacation." The Philadelphia negro is a wicked puncher and is sure to cause Sandy a lot of trouble.

Baseball

In Fredericton.

The Gleaner:—Baseball for Fredericton during the season is practically assured. A number of local business men have become interested in the formation of a club to handle a team here this year, and probably by tonight something will be known definitely as to the personnel of the committee now taking the matter up. Joe Gage, who was here on Saturday, left for St. John on Saturday evening after having conferred with some of those who will be interested in the local club. He was pleased with the outlook and the local people hope to have practically all last year's players in line again."



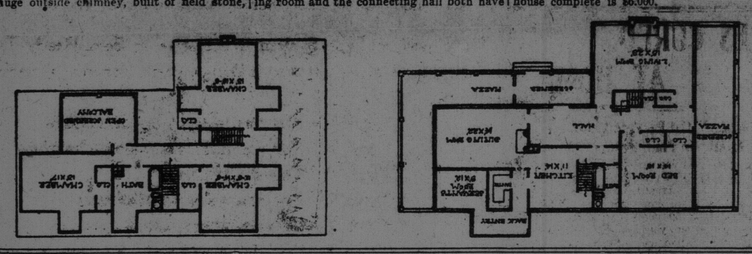
A Rural Cottage Home, Costing $6,000

DESIGNED BY CHAS S. SEDGWICK, ARCHITECT.

The ideal country home for the city merchant is one that has all of the comforts of a city home in the most simple way without extravagances or display of any kind. Simplicity in construction, in detail and in finish is the leading characteristic of a retired country home, where away from all forpalities of city life, the simple life can be perfectly enjoyed.

In this design the requirements of such a home are shown. The exterior is very low and quaint in its general appearance, of the old-fashioned Colonial style, with low-pitched roofs and broad piazzas, the exterior cemented with a rough dash, the huge outside chimney, built of field stone, all combined to give a homelike appearance. The size of this cottage is 43 feet in width across the front portion by 24 feet in depth, and the rear "L" portion 24 feet in width by 36 feet in length, with a broad piazza across the two sides of the rear "L" and across the main front.

The main living room and one large bedroom occupy the principal front space of the main door, with a central hallway between. These two rooms open with large French windows on the front piazza. The rear "L" comprises a large dining room, with kitchen, pantry, etc., in connection, and a rear servant's bed-room. The dining room and the connecting hall both have fireplaces and open with large windows onto the piazza. The second floor is low, lighted through gables and dormer windows and having three large chambers and one large sleeping balcony and a bathroom. The house has a basement underneath, with large amusement room under the front portion for billiard room and games. The entire house is finished in pine, stained dark mission, the floors of hardwood, varnished, and the house plastered and walls tinted. The exterior trimmings are white, with gray cement walls and green roof. The estimated cost of this house complete is $6,000.



LITTLE FABLES OF THE RISING YOUNG MAN

When a Rising Young Man starts out for his vacation his fancy "lightly turns to thoughts of love." That two weeks' advance pay looks big enough to support a wife on for a whole year!

The first thing a chap looks for as he drives up to a hotel where he's going to spend his vacation is the best-looking girl on the veranda. The next thing is to see which one of them seems most interested in his arrival.

The chap who allows himself to be seated in the dining-room with an old maid on one side and a married couple on the other—when there are six pretty maidens at another table down at the end of the room—deserves just what he gets. And the chances are he's the sort who gets a raise in his salary about every three years. If he isn't, it'll take him just about two minutes to tip the head waiter and move down.

There's many a chap at a summer resort who dosen't realize what an ambitious versatile lad he really is until he gets to telling a fair maid about himself in a hammock out in the moonlight.

Somehow, one girl on the place assumes the form of a Queen of Love and Beauty, even though she isn't extra strong on looks, if she gives the other Chaps summering there the go-by and smiles only at HIM!

The wise young chap, maritally inclined sees to it that he receives several letters in feminine handwriting during his stay at the hotel, and he lets the girls learn, inadvertently, that he's received them. But the Cad proves he's a Cad by taking them out and reading them to any girl who's willing ti listen.

Before the average Rising Young Man starts out on his vacation he enthuses and dreams of the various forms of exercise he's going to take to build up his constitution, worn out by the winter's work. But, two days after he arrives, he's forgotten all about tennis, golf and fishing and confines his exercises to swinging a hammock for a maiden fair and picking up her handkerchief when she drops it.

It's surprising how much trouble it is to shave morning and evening for business, but how delightful it is when a Chap has an engagement to go walking wiht a Summer Girl in the morning and dancing with her in the evening.

There's just one thing that mars this vacation business, and that is a fellow's got to make up his mind to spend his entire time with the lassie he's picked out as his Summer Girl or stick close to the men and leave all the girls lonesome—it's either poker or flirtation, for no Chap can serve two masters on such an occasion.

And another thing, in passing, is that much depends upon how the Summer Girl protests about a Chap's playing poker with the men. He's either overjoyed at her protestations—and takes them as evidence of a serious and lasting interest in his spiritual welfare—or he's suddenly brought to the realization that she's not the girl for him.

To know just how far to carry a summer flirtation and just when to stop is an art that but few Chaps understand. Many of them get in so deep that they're perfectly willing not to crawl out. But the majority sidestep and back off when the maid's mother becomes interested in the number of lumps of sugar he likes in his coffee of a morning.

SAVING THE CHILDREN

A number of states have enacted laws this year regulating nightwork by children, the most notable being New York's provision that no one under 21 years of age may be employed as a night messenger after 10 o'clock p.m.

In New Jersey, after five years' battle with the glass manufacturers, the child labor committee has secured the nightwork bill, which prohibits the employment of children 16 years of age between the hours of 7 p.m. and 7 a.m.

In Maryland nightwork for children under 16 years of age has been prohibited, and employment by day for children under 14.

PAINTING OF CORONATION NEARLY DONE

Bacon Has Enjoyed Task That Abbey Found Difficult — Declares King and Queen Ideal as Sitters

(Times' Special Correspondence)

London, April 6—It is now almost certain that the great canvas depicting the coronation of King George, nearing completion in the studio of J. H. F. Bacon, A.R.A., will be shown at the coming exhibition of the Royal Academy before finding a permanent home in Buckingham Palace. For a while there was a doubt of the painter's ability to finish the picture in time, but so ready have been royalty and peers to sit for their portraits that there has been little or no delay in the work.

Bacon's experience is in sharp contrast to that of the late Edward A. Abbey, an American painter who was commissioned to prepare the official canvas of King Edward's coronation. Abbey has left on record an account of the immense difficulties he had to overcome in completing his great picture. Peers and peeresses are said to have openly rebelled against sitting to him and it is recalled that there was considerable feeling against the commission being given to a foreigner when there were so many English painters almost as well qualified to do the work. Abbey is said to have been offered a similar honor by King George, but turned it down as politely as possible.

Bacon, however, seems to have had an enjoyable time. His canvas measures eighteen feet in length and about three hundred figures appear on it. He has been working nine months on it and has had as sitters the king and queen and all the important participants in the gorgeous event. Speaking of the king and queen, he says:

"Without doubt, the king and queen are two of the very best sitters I have ever met. It is a common idea to suppose that reigning monarchs are impatient and imperious, and that they inspire you with the feeling, when in their presence, that your business must be transacted with breathless speed. This may be with certain monarchs, but it certainly is not the case with our own. King George's courteous patience is a lesson to all who come under his personal influence, while Queen Mary's charm and kindly interest place all who are with her entirely at their ease."

ELIZA AGAIN.

"Only unmarried men wanted! That's the third job Eliza's done me out of this morning!"

William Peterson, arrested last week for wandering about and not giving a satisfactory account of himself, was brought before Magistrate Ritchie again yesterday afternoon, and after being lectured, was allowed to go.
