...E I. C. R. TO ...HAMPTON VILLAGE

...H. McAlister, the Liberal candi...e Kings-Albert, has received the ...gratifying information that tenders ...being called for the construction of ...extension of the Intercolonial Railway ...a Hampton Station to Hampton vil...e.

This is another result of Dr. McAlister's ...ergetic efforts to improve conditions in ...is constituency. As early as last April, ...hen the need of this short extension was ...lled to his attention, he took up the ...uestion with the Minister of Railways as ...ell as with the Hon. William Pugsley, ...inister of Public Works, and Sir Wilfrid, and was so successful that very soon ...fter, a sum was placed in the estimates ...pay for the survey and construction of ...e road. This was done before an election ...as thought of and the surveyors were at ...ork before either the opposition or the ...overnment knew that parliament would ...dissolved.

Several surveys were made to determine ...e best route from Hampton Station to ...mpton village, and finally that which is ...nown as the "Dineen Point route" was ...hosen. This will mean that suburban ...rains from St. John instead of making ...Hampton station their terminus will go ...ight along to Hampton village, and this ...autiful spot, one of the most attractive ...the province of New Brunswick, will ...ve, not only water communication with ...John, but be in close contact as well ...th the Intercolonial Railway service.

...his will mean much to the present in...stries at that point. It will certainly in...re greater commercial activity, and it ...ll undoubtedly be the means of adding ...o the attractions of the place for summer ...ourists. Hampton village will not only be ...benefitted greatly but the residents on the North Shore, one of the garden spots of New Brunswick, will find themselves in close touch with the railway and consequently, so much nearer the market. Every man who owns land along the line of this new branch will be better off and every farm within easy reach of the extension terminus will be of higher value for this most successful effort of Dr. McAlister.

CANADA'S REVENUE

Ottawa, Aug. 31—Customs figures for August indicate continued trade prosperity and a general stocking up of importing firms for an expected record fall trade.

The total customs revenue for the month was $7,678,395, an increase of $1,198,600 over August of last year, and the largest August revenue on record, despite the shipping strike in Great Britain.

For the five months of the fiscal year the customs revenue has been $33,596,145, an increase of $4,504,543 over the corresponding period of last year.

It is expected that the customs revenue for the year will pass the $80,000,000 mark.

LAST OUTING.

The last outing of the Natural History Society for the season will take place tomorrow at Manawagonish Beach. Gordon Leavitt will supervise the party. Application for seats in the buckboards should be made today at the museum.

The Druggist Knew From Experience

I have been selling Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root for the past three years and those of my customers who buy it speak favorably regarding it. I have used it in my own family with good results and believe the preparation has great curative value. You may use this as you like.

Very respectfully,

RECIPROCITY WILL BE OF IMMENSE BENEFIT TO OUR FISHERMEN

Mahone Bay, N. S., Aug. 25, 1911,

To the Editor
Progress-Enterprise,
Lunenburg, Nova Scotia.

Dear Sir:—It is my wish to say something in favor of the Reciprocity agreement now before the Electors of this Dominion and I wish to say most emphatically that I am in favor of ALL the terms of the agreement in all its branches. My very long connection with the fish business as a buyer, importer, manufacturer, exporter, and seller, enables me to say that in my opinion those portions of the agreement relating to fish WILL BE OF IMMENSE BENEFIT TO ALL ENGAGED IN THAT BUSINESS.

The man who catches the fish will certainly be able to get more for his share of the fish that are caught; the vessel owner will derive greater returns from his investment; the men who are engaged in the preparation of the fish, such as fish-makers, wharf laborers, makers of barrels and boxes, must undoubtedly earn more money. More vessels will be built and ship-carpenters and lumbermen will feel the advantages of the increase in that line of business.

With the removal of the duties on fish, and the opening up of a new and ever increasing market for fish and fish products, I believe that NEW LIFE WILL BE GIVEN THE FISHING POPULATION OF THIS PROVINCE AND COUNTY. With the increase of trade all classes of our population must of necessity become more prosperous. Every laborer will be receiving greater wages than their employers are now able to pay. There will be more fish caught and the fish-makers instead of losing what they now earn (as opponents of the measure have stated) will be making a greater quantity.

A little thought on the point ought to convince the most skeptical. Of necessity all the fish caught must be "made," and they can be "made" nowhere as cheaply or as quickly as where they are landed, and that will be in the home port of the vessel. Again there should be a great future for the fish dealers in preparing their own fish put up in boxes for export shipment and that will necessarily mean the establishment of numerous fish factories along our different ports and harbors, giving employment to many.

I believe other industries will also become established and instead of our young people moving away constantly, there will be a GENERAL RETURN OF THOSE WHO HAVE GONE AND THE ONES WHO OTHERWISE WOULD GO WILL REMAIN AT HOME. There will be steady and lucrative employment for people of all classes. The farmers will of necessity benefit for all other classes are dependent upon them for food stuffs. In fact, I believe the ADVANTAGES TO BE DERIVED ARE INCALCULABLE.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) ABRAHAM ERNST.

Lord Dunmore, Now Visiting in States, is Christian Scientist and Victoria Cross Man —A Career of Adventure

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.)

Lord Dunmore, who has just arrived in America with his wife, on the S. S. Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, is, like his father before him, a Christian Scientist, and his visit to America is, I understand, in connection with this cult. He is also one of that small band of men who wear the Victoria Cross, perhaps the most highly prized of all such distinctions, since it is conferred only for feats of altogether exceptional heroism under the fire of the enemy.

Although a soldier by profession, he won the order, not as a soldier, but as a war correspondent for the London "Times." He was doing duty as an A. D. C. on the staff of the Viceroy of India when the frontier war of 1897 broke out. He volunteered for active service, and being unable to get to the front as a combatant, went as a war correspondent.

During a brush with the enemy, he managed to rescue a dangerously wounded comrade, Lieut. McLean, whose horse had been killed. It was the bravest feat of the campaign, and those who witnessed it cannot, to this day, understand how Lord Dunmore managed to escape unhurt as he and the wounded man were literally surrounded by the savage foe. On the same day he had no less than three horses shot under him.

Lord Dunmore has likewise seen active service in the Boer war and under Kitchener in Egypt, and in the Soudan, but retired from his lieutenant colonelcy of the 16th Lancers on succeeding to his father's Earldom, in order to devote himself to the management of his family estates.

He is married to Miss Kemble, daughter of the Scotch Laird, who owns the greater part of the Isle of Skye, has written two or three good books of travel, and is known in the army and in clubland by the nickname of "Long Fin," owing to the fact that the title which he bore until he succeeded to the earldom was that of Viscount Fincastle, and that his stature is altogether abnormal — he stands six feet four in his stocking feet.

His Christian Scientist ideas got him on one occasion into trouble with the present Crownprincess of Sweden, formerly Princess Margaret of Connaught. Acting as her vis-a-vis at tennis, he had the misfortune to send a ball flying into her face with such force that she was compelled to quit the game. Acting in accordance with these principles, he remained mute, and did not attempt to apologize, assuming of course that the blow could not possibly have really hurt her.

The late Lord Dunmore was a frequent visitor to the States, and took part in the war of the Union, serving on the staff of General Robert E. Lee during the last eighteen months of the conflict. Although holding a commission in the royal navy, as Captain Charles Murray, he had previously under an assumed name commanded during nearly three years, the Nashville, and other blockade runners, being one of a number of Englishmen of birth, fortune and title, who embarked in the blockade running enterprise for the sake of the excitement and adventure. He will be remembered as the inventor and originator of the now popular form of entertainment known as the smoking concert.

The late Earl was also famous as an explorer, and one of his principal feats in this capacity was the ride on horseback from Pekin to Constantiople. When he got back to England, he published a volume describing the journey, which resulted in a very odd controversy in the London "Times." In his book he asserted that one of the great Central Asian rulers by whom he had been entertained on his journey, was so convinced of Divine consideration, that he was in the habit of granting free passes to Heaven, by means of letters of recommendation addressed "to my brother Gabriel." Either a copy of the book, or else some newspaper recapitulating this story, must in some wonderful manner have reached Central Asia. For nearly a year afterwards the London "Times" received a letter from the dusky potentate in question, which it published, and in which he denounced the Earl as a liar, declaring that he had made but a poor return for the hospitality received.

The Earldom of Dunmore was originally created in favor of Lord Charles Murray, second son of the Marquis of Atholl, and who was Master of the Horse to King James III's daughters, Princess Mary and Princess Anne, prior to their respective accessions to the throne. It was this first Earl of Dunmore's grandson who was the last British Governor of Virginia.

It was this peer's daughter, Lady Augusta Murray, whose marriage to King George III's son, the Duke of Sussex, at Rome, without the sanction of the crown, led to the enactment of the so-called Royal Marriage Law, which rendered unions contracted by the members of the English reigning house illegal, unless the consent of the sovereign in council has previously been given, under the Great Seal of England. There was a son born to this union between the Duke and Lady Augusta Murray. He figured in English society for many years under the name of Sir Augustus Murray d'Este, and on account of his pretensions to royal rank, was a source of no end of trouble and annoyance to the reigning family during the early part of Queen Victoria's reign.

Lord Dunmore has many American relatives. One of his cousins, Henry Murray, married the daughter of Samuel Babcock, of New York. Another, Captain Augustus Murray of the royal navy, married the daughter of David Lee of New York, an elder sister of that American-born widowed Countess of Waldersee, who through her first marriage with Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein, is an aunt of the German Empress. The late Sir Charles Murray, a grand-uncle of Lord Dunmore, married the daughter of James Wadsworth, of Genesee, N. Y., by whom he had a son, Charles Murray, who has sat in parliament, and has spent several years in the diplomatic service.

Another son of Sir Charles Murray was that unfortunate Cecil Murray, who died of a dose of cyanide of potassium, on an ocean liner, while on the way from Southampton to New York. It was ascertained that the cyanide of potassium belonged to his cabin mate, a Major Frederick Helbert, of one of the militia batallions of the English army. It was also found that he had left a will, written on shipboard, bequeathing his entire fortune to this Major Helbert, although he had only made his acquaintance two weeks before sailing for America.

In spite of these extremely suspicious circumstances, the difficulty of bringing home any definite proofs, and above all, the differences of opinion as to the question of jurisdiction, no proceedings were brought against Major Helbert, and while it is doubtful whether Cecil Murray's will in his favor would have ever been admitted to probate by any English court of justice, yet the Major, by threatening to make it the basis of a suit, in which certain feminine entanglements of young Murray would have been revealed, knowledge of which he had obtained by the examination of Murray's papers, was able to extort from his family a considerable sum of money.

After a subsequent career of fraud here in America, where he was extensively entertained, and accorded the courtesies of the best clubs in the leading cities, Helbert was dismissed from the army, and when last I heard of him, was "doing time" in an English penitentiary for robbing a London jeweler.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

"THE correctness with which a man pronounces," an old college professor used to tell all his classes, "is the hall mark of his culture and education."

It seems to me that very few people would be 100 point folks by that thest.

Perhaps you think my remarks are unduly sweeping and unnecessarily harsh. Perhaps you think that you, for instance, do not very often make a mistake in pronunciation.

Now before you pat yourself on the back, my friend, let me ask you how you pronounce a few words like address, inquiry, alias, interesting, aspirant, grievous, harass, illustrate, precedent, resource.

Look up your pronunciation of these words in the dictionary and if you have them all right I'll humbly beg your pardon. But I'll wager I won't have to.

Of course, the common words which could hardly be pronounced in more than one way most of us get right. Only children and distinctly ignorant people make errors in these. But there are many words which are commonly pronounced two or three ways and yet which should properly be pronounced only one way. When a man pronounces all these words properly he has certainly earned his window in the Hall of Culture.

But how few people do.

Of course, it would be almost impossible to sit down and corral these words all at once and learn to pronounce them aright.

But one can make an effort to notice different pronunciations in the course of conversation and then hunt out the right one and make it one's own.

That's the hardest way, but, like most hard ways, it's the only sure way.

It isn't safe to adopt a pronunciation because you hear someone you think is well educated using it. Many people who ought to know better cling firmly to faulty pronunciations.

Nor is it safe to adopt a pronunciation because it sounds "high-brow." You are very apt to get caught this way. For instance, I think "in-quiry" sounds most "college-professory," but as a matter of fact "inquir-y" has the weight of authority. And again, "pre-cedence" certainly sounds punctilliously correct, but "preced-ence" really is the right pronunciation.

If you care to hunt down some of these words I think you will find the chase rather interesting.

Of course there's the drawback that even if you do learn to pronounce correctly ninety-nine-one-hundredths of the people who hear you won't know you are doing so.

But cheer up. Think how the other one hundredth will appreciate such a rarity.

Besides, you know, knowledge as well as virtue, is, or surely ought to be, its own reward.

HARD ON SPIFFKINS.

"Aunt Mary, this is my friend, Mr. Spiffkins."

"I'm sorry, I didn't quite catch the name."

"Mr. Spiffkins."

"I'm really very sorry dear; would you mind repeating iit

"Mr. Spiffkins."

"I'm sorry I must give it up—it sounds to me just like Spiffkins.'"—Philadelphia Times.

What good does it do to know that behind the darkest cloud the sun is shining, if you haven't an umbrella at the time?
