MARCH.

In the snowing and the blowing,
In the cruel sleet,—
Little flowers begin their growing
Far beneath our feet.
Softly tap the Spring, and cheerly,
"Darlings, are you here?"
Till they answer: "We are nearly,
Nearly ready, dear."

"Where is Winter, with his snowing?
Tell us, Spring," they say.
Then she answers: "He is going,
Going on his way.
Poor old Winter does not love you,—
But his time is past.
Soon my birds shall sing above you,
Set you free at last!"

—M. M. D., in St. Nicholas for March.

NOTES AND NEWS.

UNITED STATES.

"The Shah of Persia" was present at the Mardi Gras festival in New Orleans. He is not the Shah that eats with his knife.

Virginia City, Nevada, appears to be eaten up by gamblers, and the newspapers there refuse to make reports of the banquet. It is estimated that the professionals realize $1,200,000 a year from miners, merchants and other customers.

A Chicago paper circulates the dreadful rumor "that a second Gilmore will gather all the singing societies and brass bands in the thirty-seven States and concentrate them in Philadelphia in 1876, with intent to unite them in one harmonious howl. Is it for this that we have suffered 100 years of freedom?"

Edwin Booth, says a New York correspondent, is only forty, and can make a fortune by giving "readings," which is less exhaustive than the full display of a tragic performance. He is now on a tour in the West, and his theatre is in other hands. It will, no doubt, retain his name, but he will never be connected with it again except as a performer.

GENERAL.

A Berne despatch says that Miss Brewood, an American lady, has performed the perilous feat of attaining the summit of the Jungfrau Mountain.

The Nursery for March is full of pictures, poetry and sketches exactly suited to little children. This periodical has no rival in its own field, and should be in every nursery.

Commander Belknap, of the United States Tuscarora, sounding for the Japan cable, sends a report from Honolulu of the soundings made between San Diego and that port. Sixty-two soundings were taken. The average depth of the line is about 1,900 fathoms. The greatest depth was near the Sandwich Islands, 3,054 fathoms. The bottom is undulating and favorable for a cable.

The ruins of the Pantechnicon, which was burned Friday night, 13th inst., are still smoldering, but notwithstanding this the insurance companies have already set men to work seeking salvage, and a number of racing cups and much jewelry, which were stored in the building, have been recovered uninjured. Thousands of spectators watch the progress of the work. It is said the loss of one insurance company by the fire is so heavy that it is crippled.

In the German Reichstag, Wednesday, the Bishop of Metz, who is a member, asked the President for permission to be accompanied by an interpreter during the sitting. His request was refused. The motion offered by an Alsatian deputy that Alsace and Lorraine be permitted a plebiscitum to decide their nationality has been rejected by an overwhelming majority. During the debate on the proposition for a plebiscite in Alsace and Lorraine, M. Taitsch, an Alsatian delegate, supported the motion in a violent speech, in the course of which he said Germany had overstepped the principles which should be binding upon civilized nations. He held that the annexation to Germany was illegal. "We are sent here," he said, "to proclaim our affection for our French fatherland, and that your act of violence prevents us from regarding you as brethren."

The Madrid Government intends taking a plebiscite of the people in Spain on the question of a Ministerial authorization for the repeal of section 33 of the constitution of 1869 relative to the monarchy. The Spanish project of constitution of 1869 was presented to the Cortes on the 30th of March in that year. It was signed by all the members of the committee—fourteen in number—appointed to draft it; Salustiano de Olozaga being President of the body. It is a lengthy document. Chapter 2 defines public powers, commencing at article 32, "All powers emanate from this nation." Article 33 declares, "The form of government of the Spanish nation is monarchy." The official step for a plebiscite is considered imperatively necessary in order to secure the stability of the present republican government and to prevent its dissolution in view of the Alfonsist intrigues. The Spanish Government also contemplates a change to the ordinary Cortes in lieu of the Constituent; Serrano's term of power to be one year at the head of a conservative republic.

The March number of St. Nicholas opens with a very useful article on Edward Jenner. Accompanying this is a fine engraving of the statue of Jenner by Monteverde. Miss Alcott contributes a story, "Roses and Forget-me-nots;" Robert Dale Owen has a sketch of his boyhood, "Rascally Sandy;" there is a sea-side story, full of adventure and fun; a sketch of Gulliver, the Lilliputians, and Swift, by Donald G. Mitchell; a well illustrated story, "What the Stork Saw;" and a narrative of a girl's adventures when "snowed in" on a Western prairie. A capital poem, "Effie Jack, the Giant-Killer," will delight both old and young. We also find among the poems a very beautiful bit of verse, by the Editor, called "March." The illustrations are up to the usual high standard, and there are some very striking full-page pictures. The engraving called "Some Curious Fishes," drawn by Jas. C. Beard, will open the eyes of the youngsters. The French story is unusually good this month, and is well illustrated. A "Letter Box" has been added to the attractions of the magazine. This will be good news to young people who like to ask questions of editors.

Edward Jenner.

Edward Jenner was born in Berkeley, Gloucestershire, England, May 17, 1749, nearly 125 years ago. His father was a well-to-do clergyman, and Edward was brought up in comfort, and well taught. His father died when he was only five years old; but his elder brother, who was also a clergyman, took care of him, and was as good as a father to him. Edward Jenner was very fond of the country, and nearly all his life was spent in the neighborhood of the beautiful Vale of Gloucester, where he had the good fortune to be born.

While Edward Jenner was a young man, working and studying in a surgeon's office in a town called Sodbury, near Bristol, which is the chief town of Gloucestershire, he used to hear a good deal of talk about the small-pox. This disease makes great trouble in our own time, and when it is prevalent there is hardly any sickness people are more afraid of; but it is not so bad now-a-days as it was in Jenner's time. It was a frightful plague, and carried off in England alone, it is said, 40,000 people every year! Kings died of it, queens, princes, princesses, the rich and the poor, the high and low, the learned and the ignorant. When it appeared in an army, it often slew more than the sword, and our soldiers suffered grievously from this pestilence in the beginning of the War of Independence.

You may believe that many wise heads and kind hearts were trying to find out a way to fight this disease. Thirty one years before Edward Jenner was born, a bright, witty lady, with a sharp tongue but a good heart,—Lady Mary Wortley Montague,—had found that in Turkey, where the small-pox raged so terribly every year, they had a day of treating well people so as to give them the disease, but in a lighter and less dangerous form than if they took it in the common way. Well persons were willing to be made ill in this way, because they knew that small-pox very rarely comes to a person more than once. This was called inoculation, and Lady Mary, to show her faith, had her own son inoculated in 1718, and with perfect success. This was thought a great discovery, and so it was; for she had brought to notice a great principle; but something was wanting. The cure was worse than the disease. Inoculation did not stop the small-pox, nor check it, for soon it was raging as badly as ever.

It may have been fifty years after Lady Mary's brave experiment upon her son, that while Edward Jenner was an apprentice in that surgeon's office at Sodbury, a young milkmaid came to the surgery one day, and happening to hear the medical men talking about the small-pox, she said that she was not afraid of catching it, for she had had the cow-pox. Little she knew what important words she had spoken; and, indeed, I suppose they only were important because an observing, thinking, quick-witted young man stood by to hear them.

The cow-pox is a disease of the eruptive kind, that shows itself on the udders of cows, and is sometimes caught by the people who are milking them. It is generally a mild disease, from which the cow suffers little, and the human being does not suffer seriously, being lightly ill for only a few days. Besides, it is not communicated as the small-pox is, by simply coming near the person who is in with that disease; the matter that is in the little blisters on the cow's udder must get of itself under the skin of a human being, or be put under it, before it can be communicated. Now, it seems it had been known for many years in the grazing districts of England that if this were done, and the human being had the cow-pox, there was little or no danger for him from the small-pox. And the farmers had been giving themselves the cow-pox, and giving it to their families, and thus keeping the dreaded small-pox at a safe distance, and nobody outside the farming district seems to have been the wiser for it. And respectable physicians, young and old, had been trundling about the country in their gigs, and looking wise, and shaking their heads over the small-pox, and never suspecting that the method of preventing it was all the time in use under their very eyes. How long this would have gone on who can tell, if thoughtful Edward Jenner had not listened to what the milkmaid said that morning in the surgery? But it set him thinking, in his slow, steady, earnest way; and the idea once seized, that here was the long-desired prevention, he never lost sight of it until he had proved it beyond a doubt.

Dr. Jenner made no secret of his great discovery,—tried to get no patent for it, but freely gave it to the world. The Government, however, rewarded him handsomely, giving him £10,000 in 1802, and £20,000 five years later, in 1807. But he did not care for money, and he did not work for fame, so he continued to live quietly in his pleasant country home, amid his old friends and the old scenes, until his sudden, peaceful death in February, 1823, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. Few men have lived so happily, or have done so much good, yet it is fifty years after his death, and not in his England, but in far-away India, that gritude to his memory is spoken in a statute!

Since the discovery of vaccination, the terrors of small-pox have nearly disappeared, and with good nursing, intelligent physicians are not much afraid of it. In many countries the government obliges every person to be vaccinated, and those who cannot pay a doctor are vaccinated free of charge at the public dispensaries.

The Devil Fish in Newfoundland Waters.

The existence of large cuttle-fish in the waters around these shores cannot be questioned. I am in possession of numerous accounts from persons of undoubted veracity and intelligence, who have seen and measured some of these giants. The Rev. E. Gabriel assures me that in the winter of 1870 the bodies of two gigantic cuttle-fish were cast ashore, during a storm, at Lamaline, on the southern shore, the bodies of which measured forty and forty-seven feet respectively. Another person, resident at Twillingate, tells me he saw one whose body measured eighty feet. I am inclined to suspect this measurement included the arms, and that the body may have been forty feet. A third informant assures me he measured one whose body and outstretched arms were fifty feet in length—the body itself probably twenty to twenty-five feet. Numerous instances are on record of specimens from ten to twenty feet in length of body. The bulk of our fishermen believe firmly in their existence, and call them "big squids." They have a common saying that "the squid is the biggest fish in the sea." One of them told me a curious tale. His little coasting craft lay at anchor one day, in a northern harbour, when suddenly, so the amazed [illegible] aboard, she began to sink, [illegible] leak. In alarm, [illegible] boat; when other [illegible] the water was nearly [illegible] the deck, she suddenly [illegible] again. Soon after they saw a "big squid" floating about, and not unnaturally concluded that it had been trying its strength on their little craft, by fastening its suckers on the bottom and dragging it down, and, then, for some reason, changed its mind, and relaxed its hold. I am thoroughly satisfied that there are about these coasts cuttle-fish whose bodies are more than thirty feet, and I regard it as probable that some of these specimens are occasionally met with thirty-five or even forty feet in length."

We clip the above from advance sheets of the Maritime Monthly for March. Mr. Harvey relates what he knows of the monster devil-fish in a clear and succinct style, and his article cannot fail to create much discussion in scientific circles. The March Monthly, which will be published in a few days, is an unusually interesting number.

MRS. LESTER—Dear Madam; I have been troubled for the last fifteen years with Biliousness, and have tried many of the different kinds of medicines recommended for the cure of the above complaint, but received no material benefit until I commenced using your DINNER PILLS, (now about eight months since.) I continued their use according to directions for about three months, and must say that I have enjoyed better health since taking the Pills than I have for the last fifteen years, and would recommend them, with all confidence, to any person similarly troubled.
