In the Boise de Boulogne.

Italian officers, slender and dark, are swathed in close-fitting puttees and uniforms, while Serbian giants swing proudly along. We turn and watch the latter; they are seldom seen, their race is scattered, their numbers pitifully few. Belgians are everywhere and of many types—one thinks of them en masse as sturdy soldiers in khaki, each with a tassel swaying from his cap. Even the composite American offers a more concrete type—reminding one most of the colonials, but always more or less self-conscious. There was no doubt as to the resolution and enthusiasm with which they had plunged into military life in this fourth year; but the grip on rifle and sword was a bit unsteady as yet; palms were moulded more accurately to plough or axe, the habit of fingers was still too facile with pen or brush or lever. Raw as we seemed to the game, nothing but assurance of the ultimate worth and skill of these big, clean men ever came to one's ears from any of their allied brethren. One loved them all the more to see approaching groups searching nervously for any officer's insignia which they might miss. And for a lieutenant unconsciously to lift his cap to a fellow country-woman, was a delight. —Atlantic.

German War Humor.

The following printed inscription on a Hamburg postcard received October 19th, 1917, was taken, says the London News, from the body of a dead German soldier. The original, of course, was in German:

Citizens' Receipt for Cooking.

Take the Meat Card, stir it in with the Egg Card and fry the whole to a beautiful brown with the Butter Card.

The Potato and Vegetable Cards must be cooked and the flour Card sprinkled in.

In order to quickly and intensively cook you place the Coal Card and the Spirit Card underneath the pan and light them.

For Dessert you pour boiling water on the Coffee Card and add the Milk Card to it, sweetening it to taste with the Sugar Card. After eating, you wash with the Soap Card and dry yourself on the bill.

Changes In Diet.

Illustrating the idea that dietary changes on a vast scale may take place as a result of the war, David Fairchild says in the National Geographic Magazine: "When King John of France was being taken to England after the battle of Poitiers and one of the principal items of his expenditure was for sugar (one of the kingly luxuries of his day), could he possibly have imagined that the time would come when a descendant of a West African slave, in a continent yet undiscovered, would remark in the language of his captors, 'It just seems like somebody was dead in the house to have no sugar!' These are consequences of food habits."

Japanese Gardens.

Gardens in Japan are laid out so as to suggest scenes in Japanese history. Miniature landscapes are arranged so as to recall well-known spots in history, and suggest the events that have taken place there.

Water Power Available In Norway.

After making a new estimate of the water power available for hydro-electric development in Norway, engineers have placed the figures at 15,000,000 horsepower.
