SWICK-HANNA

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Hanna, Marshall road, Dunn, on Wednesday, January 8th, was solemnized the marriage of their daughter Margaret to Mr. George Henry Swick, of Hamilton, by Rev. James Gourlay, M. A., in the presence of a large number of the relatives and friends of both parties. The bride was prettily attired in a cream silk ribbon and lace, and carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and bridal roses. Her sister, Allie, as bridesmaid, was becomingly dressed in white and carried a handsome boukuet of pink roses. The groom was supported by his friend, Mr. R. Somerville, of Hamilton. A large number of useful and beautiful presents testified to the esteem in which the bride is held. The groom's present to her was a beautiful gold locket and chain; and to the bridesmaid and groomsman handsome signet rings. The young couple will make their home in Hamilton.

The fellow who hasn't a red cent naturally has no ready money.

MAKING HIGH EXPLOSIVES.

FACTORY ON THE SAND DUNES OF WEST SCOTLAND.

Protecting the "Danger Area"—Precautions Taken With the Employees—Women Do Much of the Dangerous Work—Filling Cartridges with Dynamite.

For the discovery of dynamite and other cognate powerful explosives which have now become inseparable handmaids of the mining and engineering industries the world owes a debt of gratitude to the late Alfred Nobel, the famous Swedish scientist and chemist, since he was the first to turn to practical purposes at his laboratory at Heleneborg, near Stockholm, the powerful blasting agent nitroglycerine, discovered by Sobriero and colloquially known as "blasting oil."

This compound, owing to its extremely dangerous nature and the frequency of the accidents attending its use, says an English correspondent of the Scientific American, was prohibited in many of the leading countries; and Nobel, realizing these numerous disadvantages, concerted his energies for a considerable time in the quest for an agent with which the nitro glycerine could be combined and which while not deteriorating in the slightest its high explosive qualities would at the same time enable it to be handled with comparative impunity. In this search he was ultimately successful by mixing the nitroglycerine with an absorbent earth called "kieselguhr" and producing the compound now known as dynamite. The result of this discovery was an immediate expansion in the employment of the explosive for blasting purposes in all parts of the world. After establishing factories in Germany and France in 1871, Nobel went to Great Britain.

Nobel himself selected the site for his proposed factory, and his ultimate choice fell upon Ardeer, on the west coast of Scotland. A more suitable spot for the prosecution of a dangerous trade could scarcely have been found, as the natural configuration of the country is a series of waste sand dunes, which lend themselves admirably to the work in hand by serving as natural barriers between the various sections of the danger zone.

The factory covers an area of over 800 acres, occupied by more than 800 different buildings. The works are entirely self-contained, and thus a number of different subsidiary industries are embraced in the isolated colony established at a barren spot on the shores of the Atlantic.

Nitroglycerine, as is well known, is a combination of glycerine and a mixture of sulphuric and nitric acids. The former is brought from all parts of the world and upon arrival is subjected to a rectifying process by which the various impurities suspended in the fluid are removed. The nitric acid is prepared in large buildings in which are ranged long rows of retorts bricked up like ovens. These retorts are charged with sulphuric acid and nitrate of soda, and immediately the two compounds come into contact a chemical action commences, the nitric acid being released as a corrosive gas.

The latter is carried through pipes on to a series of earthenware jars and other condensing apparatus, into which the gas is discharged and condensed. The nitric acid thus obtained is further mixed with sulphuric acid, also produced in extensive works on the spot, and conveyed in steel cars hauled by ponies to a station at the foot of one of the nitroglycerine "hills," as the mounds in which this powerful explosive liquid is prepared are called. There are five of these "hills," comprising lofty earth embankments within which are located the buildings, in which the manufacture is carried out.

The provision of the surrounding mounds covered with tall, rank grass serves to arrest the flight of fragments of the structure within, and the concussion produced by an explosion, should the building within from any cause blow up. The hills are pierced in all directions with tunnels, by which means communication with the secluded buildings is maintained. When the cars filled with acids reach the foot of one of the hills they are thence transported to the top by cable haulage.

In the "danger area" the severest discipline is maintained. All entrances are carefully guarded by searchers who rigorously examine every individual that desires to enter, relieving him of any metallic objects that may be carried upon his person, together with matches and other suspicious objects which upon coming into contact with the dangeous chemicals used in the zone might provoke trouble. No matter how often an employee engaged within the hill may pass in and out, every time he enters he must submit to this preliminary operation.

There are also some 500 girls employed and these are under the charge of matrons. Hairpins, ordinary pins, shoe buttons, metal pegs within the soles of the shoes, knitting and other needles are all religiously barred. Their hair is tied with braid or ribbon, and as with the male employees every time they enter the danger area they are searched by the matrons.

Within the danger area the various employees engaged in the different departments or phases of work are garbed in special non-inflammable working suits, varying in color according to their respective occupations.

The mixing is done by women, who knead the ingredients with their hands as if it were dough, the operation being carried out with complete thoroughness. The mixture is then picked up by a big wooden scoop and dumped into a sieve with brass meshes. The dynamite is rubbed through the orifices in small particles. As it passes through the sieve it resembles a greasy coffee colored earth finely divided, and the combination of the constituent parts being completely accomplished the product is ready for the manufacture of cartridges. This work is also carried out by female labor.

The cartridge houses are long rows of single cabins about ten feet in length and the same in width. All the buildings for the various phases of the work are divided into small units accommodating from four to six persons. In the cartridge house the machines are attached to the two side walls. They comprise a conical hopper, in which the dynamite is placed, and a small vertical brass rod or piston actuated by a lever resembling a pump handle.

At the base of the hopper is a small brass tube in which the plunger slides. As the piston descends into the mass of dynamite contained in the hopper it forces the requisite quantity through the brass tube at the bottom into the cartridge wrapper, which the girl has twisted around the tube and holds in one hand.

When the charge, about three inches in length, has been inserted in the wrapper the latter is removed, the top folded down, and the finished cartridge dropped through a slot in the wall, whence it falls into a special receiver placed outside. The operator replenishes the supply of dynamite within the hopper from a box of loose dynamite placed outside the hut through a similar slot by means of a wooden spoon. The process of filling the cartridges is carried out with great rapidity, the result of continued practice, while the plunger of the filler is lubricated by the nitroglycerine itself.

In another hut blasting gelatine cartridges are made, the process being somewhat different. This explosive is 50 per cent. more powerful than ordinary dynamite. It is of the consistency of tough elastic paste, and comprises about 7 per cent. of nitrocotton to 93 per cent. of nitroglycerine. The material is forced through a sausage machine, and as it issues therefrom it is chopped into three-inch lengths by a wooden wedge upon an india rubber covered table and wrapped into cartridges with almost lightning speed. There are in all seventy of these cartridge huts.

Owing to the fact that nitroglycerine congeals at 43 degrees F and freezes at 40 degrees F., it is necessary to maintain the atmosphere within the buildings at an even warm temperature. Steam heating is employed, the minimum temperature being 50 degrees F., the radiating pipes being completely and carefully enclosed so that no loose explosive may come into contact with the hot steam pipes and possibly promote decomposition.

An extensive variety of explosives is prepared at these works, suitable for the various exigencies of commerce and war. The principal comprise various forms of gelatines and dynamite, such as guhr dynamite, blasting gelatine, gelatine dynamite and gelignite, the latter two combinations of nitroglycerine, nitrocotton, nitrate of potash and wood meal.

There are two laboratory magazines corresponding to the extreme of temperature, the heat of the tropics and the intense cold of the Arctic. These two magazines are appropriately christened "India" and "Siberia" respectively. Of the two, the former is the more dangerous. Before entering the magazine the temperature of the interior is carefully noted through a peephole upon the large thermometer suspended within.

In view of the extreme and numerous precautions adopted at these works accidents are of comparatively rare occurrence. At times, however, catastrophes, despite the measures observed, happen, but they are invariably of a comparatively small character.

When a woman says she knows her husband like a book she may mean a cheque book.

Many a fellow is fond of holding a girl's hand who doesn't especially care for lady fingers

HERD OF REINDEER

Had Hard Time Getting Ashore to Dr. Grenfell at Labrador.

St. John's, Nfld., Jan. 11.—The herd of reindeer imported from Norway by Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, the celebrated missionary, were landed at Cremille Harbor, Labrador, under difficulties. The deer were placed on board the steamer Anita at St. John's, but on account of numerous ice floes the boat was unable to get near the shore.

The animals were lowered from the steamer to a body of ice. When deck hands started to drive the deer to land it was found that the ice was very thin, and in spite of the efforts of the men several animals broke through and perished. The bull of the herd was driven ashore safely.

A short time later a storm arose, and the Anita was forced on a reef. Her bottom was badly damaged and her sides were crushed by a huge ice floe, which was carried against the vessel. The boat remained afloat, however, and was able to reach St. John's. She arrived yesterday, leaking badly.
