SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 30.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

To-morrow is the first of Advent.

Hon. Mr. Langevin is acting Finance Minister in Mr. Tilley's absence.

It is reported that the financial affairs of Nova Scotia are in a very bad way.

Just now the office of Private Secretary to the Governor General is no sinecure.

The Ferry boats at the present time are said to be in a dilapidated condition.

Judge Hilton has increased the reward for the recovery of Stewart's body to $50,000.

It is now reported that Parliament will meet for the despatch of business early in January.

The Mechanics' Institute lecture course was opened very successfully, on Monday evening, with a grand literary and musical entertainment.

It is said that one of the most hardened members of our corporation actually blushed when his attention was called to the present condition of North Market Street.

Judging from some remarks which appeared a few days ago in the Sun of this city, the removal of Messrs. Brydges, Ruel and Ellis from office is likely to take place shortly.

At the last meeting of the Father Mathew Association a vote of thanks was passed to Dr. Quigley for the services rendered by him to the Association by delivering his able and interesting lecture in St. Malachi's Hall, on Sunday evening last.

It is almost unnecessary to inform our readers that the perpetrators of the recent robberies have not yet been discovered. The Chief has not even a "clue." The poor old man is really to be pitied and should be relieved of an office which nature never intended he should fill.

All the efforts of the Vatican to ameliorate the condition of the Catholics in Poland are stated to have been unsuccessful. It is believed that the Pope will make a final and direct appeal to the Czar and should this prove fruitless, his Holiness will issue a Encyclical letter denouncing the conduct of Russia to the Catholic world.

We are sorry to observe that our contemporary, the Sun, attributes a very unworthy motive to the kindness and courtesy extended to the members of the press who accompanied the Governor General and party from Halifax by Mr. Lutt el of the Intercolonial. Political differences are no excuse for such insinuations especially when they are unfounded as we believe them to be in this case.

The December number of "Rose Belford's Canadian Monthly will contain the opening chapters of James Payne's great story "Under one roof," a masterly and pertinent paper by Prof. Goldwin Smith on the Afghanistan question, a delightful study of Shelley by Walter Townsend, an able review of Mr. Stewart's "Canada under the administration of the Earl of Dufferin," by Wm. J. Rattray, a beautiful poem by H. L. Spencer, an idyl by Fidelis, &c., &c.

Evidently our remarks concerning the improper practices indulged in by the contractors, who have the building of the new post-office have had the desired effect. The clerk of the works, who was supposed to look after the interests of the government, has been discharged, and the contractors ordered to suspend operations for the winter. We understand a considerable portion of the work already done has been condemned and will have to be taken down in the Spring. Has the Architect escaped all responsibility for allowing the departures from the specifications that we called attention to in a previous issue? We think his case deserves the attention of the government as well as that of Mr. Cassidy's.

"A Colored Catholic" writes to the New York Sun to know why it is that the colored Catholics of New York City are not represented at the Cathedral Fair. His letter draws forth a sharp reply, and one that is to the point. We quote:—

"There are no white or colored Catholic churches in the city, and all the Catholic churches are represented. Why doesn't "Colored Catholic" visit the table of the church he belongs to?

In the Catholic churches the white, the black, and the red, receive Holy Sacrament of Communion side by side, and in the affairs of the Church there is no distinction. [illegible] African saint was a colored man, [illegible] of Lima," and many [illegible] and the little [illegible] her memory. [illegible] her on [illegible]

[illegible] which congregated [illegible] few days ago, to participate [illegible] extending a welcome to the new Governor General and his Royal wife, the Princess Louise, has in a sense of the word dispersed. Those from afar have returned to their homes in most cases, and solid, old Halifax has settled down to her usual repose and quietude. The show is over—the curtain is down—regrets and sorrows mingle with gladness, and congratulations are only thought off; regrets from those who have sore heads, and sorrows from those who had pockets picked; gladness from those who enjoyed the scene and congratulations among the people because of our pride in the new ruler. The funny side of every subject is pleasantest to look upon, if it has one; and it will be presumed that the great event which has just passed off, did have a funny s well as a loyal side, a quaint as well as a grand side. The dialect of our neighbors is by some strangers thought peculiar at least, and is often made the subject of a joke; always, of course, at the expense of the Haligonian. A St. John gentleman who, amongst his many brilliant qualities, possesses to a great extent the powers of scarcasm as well as of mimicry, while in conversation with one of those "blausted jolly fellahs" of the sister city, changed the key of his tongue and affected the air of a Cockney, accosting the "Haw, haw" gentleman thus: Awh, 'ow long 'ave you been hover hin this 'ere country?

"Haw, haw" gentleman, "awh, I beg your pawdon, I 'ave never been hover the wawter, I am a native of 'alifax, you know."

"Haw," replies our joker, "you tawk so much like hus, you know, that I thawt you were from Hingland."

A suppressed snicker was audible from the other corner of the room, in which was an appreciative audience, friends of the sham Cockney. There are always noticable peculiarities in a large gathering, style of dress; peculiarities in the phisique as well as the variety. The colored people of Halifax made a very respectable appearance in the great procession, but, of course, could not escape the remarks of the jokers, nor the criticism of those who will always remark the peculiarities of the man of the sable hue. It was a stranger who asked why was the society of colored "bruddern" attracting so much attention in the procession? The conundrum was given up, and the answer which followed was, because of it being the scenter of the line. One of the Halifax papers in referring to a play which was put on at the Academy, gave, perhaps, vent to the average Haligonian's idea of cast or class, when it said the play was "Sensational," giving the leading actress a good opportunity to display some fine acting, &c., and all in all, just the thing for a "mixed audience!" One man while assisting in the erection of an arch, sat on a stringer, the end of which was to be sawed off. It was, perhaps, elevated to a distance of twenty feet from the ground, and the man, unconsciously as well as unfortunately, sawed off the end on which he sat; and, according to the laws of gravitation, great was the fall thereof. Another man while working at an arch enclosed himself in the hollow side of the base and nailed himself in unthinkingly, and was obliged to call for the assistance of a brother workman in order to be released.

"Ah," remarked a Halifax gentleman, "the Mawquis is quite light complected. I was under the impression he had darker hair; but, I perceive, it is very nearly white upon close observation."

"Yes," replied an American gentleman, "Lorne is the white-haired boy just now."

On each side of the streets through which the procession passed, the people gazed in admiration at the Princess on one side and the Marquis on the other. Everybody, of course, gloried in the honor of a personal bow. Such appeared to be particularly the case while the procession was passing through Brunswick street, as it is said an old lady who gloried in the possession of a window in the Reform Club Rooms, anxiously reached out, gazing intently on the distinguished personages, waving her handkerchief in great glee until the Princess and Marquis were in front of her, the Princess bowed, the old lady was in estacies; and the smile that is said to have illuminated her face, appeared to have completed her earthly happiness.

JOE.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ARRIVAL.

The proceedings in Halifax on the occasion of the arrival of the Governor General and his Royal spouse have been of the most agreeable and interesting character. Never before have the people of the Dominion extended such a hearty welcome to their appointed rulers. No doubt the exalted rank of the Governor General's wife, and the desire of Canadians to testify their loyalty to her Royal mother, were the principal causes for this enthusiasm. The distinguished arrivals have every reason to be, and we believe, are very much gratified at the warmth of their reception. This is well. It is most desirable that the first impressions of our rulers concerning the people of the Dominion should be favorable. The demonstration of loyalty and affection with which they were received, cannot fail to attract the favorable notice of the English people, a matter which is of considerable importance to Canada. Some have expressed doubts as to the ability of the Marquis of Lorne to successfully govern Canada, particularly as his administration shall have the disadvantage of being contrasted with the brilliant rule of his predecessor. We do not share those fears. From all we can learn the Marquis is a gentleman of considerable abilities, which he will have an opportunity of developing in his new position. His reputation is a good one, and we have every confidence that his administration will be highly advantageous to Canada. So far as Canadian interests are concerned, we cannot conceive of any appointment that would be better calculated to promote her welfare. The fact that the son-in-law and daughter of our Queen are at the head of our Colonial Government will increase the confidence of English capitalists in Canadian securities. Just now this is very important, as in all probability it will greatly facilitate Mr. Tilley's efforts to float another Canadian loan. The rank and standing of our new rulers will also have the effect of drawing the attention of many who heretofore were almost ignorant of our existence to this Dominion and its vast resources. This will be something that cannot fail to be of considerable benefit to us, as the more our country is known, the more it will be appreciated. Everything considered, we think the appointment of the Marquis of Lorne an excellent one for Canada, and one from which the best results may be reasonably expected.

THE "NEWS."

The sagacious News is clever in the matter of leaving unanswered questions, any reference to which would have a leaning to affect the assumed regard for political honor and consistency of its editor.

Its style of answering our questions with regard to Mr. Willis and his varied political career is something after the fashion our Yankee neighbors adopt, that is answer a question by asking another.

We must give it the credit of denying without qualification that either Mr. Willis or Mr. Covert complained because they were not consulted by Messrs. Fraser and Wedderburn before the late reconstruction was consummated. One would think it was enough for the soi disant leader of the opposition to answer for his own precious self, without undertaking to speak, unauthorized, for Mr. Covert.

However, it is not a difficult matter for the News to assert or deny anything, particularly when the political reputation of the thoroughly consistent Mr. Willis is in dispute, but we do think the News stretched matters pretty far even for that journal in its attempting to speak for the utterances of the gentleman who was the nominal leader of the opposition in the late House of Assembly,

The News had better cease prating about other matters in our political history until it has answered those queries. It has been at times equivocal and then reticent. Last week it shewed that it could deny if it chose. Now if it can deny the truthfulness of our questions, let it do so, if not let it hold its peace.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 26.

While the city is filling with strangers, and one sees familiar faces of Congressmen who return to serve out the three remaining months of their terms, thoughts and incidents touching this one and that naturally come to mind. None of those who, on duty right here, have seen the coming and going of men in public life realize how rapidly the scene changes. It is like the evolutions of the Kalaidescope. The men who are to-day the leading actors in the events, and whose lives seem closely interwoven with the countrys being, to-morrow step down and out, seldom missed. Now and then one elected to Congress returns year after year, and becomes a land mark as it were; but as a rule they serve their brief day and pass in oblivion.

Everybody is talking about the unusual changes in the personel of the next House. It is seldom that so many prominent members are left out at one time, yet perhaps there never was a time when a clean sweep could be made with less detriment to the public good. Nearly half the members of the present House failed to be returned, and the unfortunate ones are about evenly divided between the two parties. I met Abram S. Hewitt to-day and observe that the troubled—almost pained expression of his countenance has not departed. Of all the unreturned members none will be more generally missed then Hewitt. He suffers greatly from dyspepsia, nervousness, and lost of sleep which renders him very exciteable and irritable; yet with all that he is a worker and a thoroughly honest experienced man whose usefulness is the greater from the esteem in which he is held by his associates of both parties. But he remarked once that he did not regard John Kelly a statesman, and for that error of judgment Kelly named another man to represent the district when the nominating convention assembled this year. Hewitt was a member of the joint committee that framed the bill creating the Electoral Commission, and in the sincerity of his nature took a good deal of stock in the candid professions of his Republican associates on the committee, particularly Hoar and Edmunds. Both the latter were put on the commission, to assist in construing the law which they had helped to create. After it became evident that these two statesmen were voting to exclude evidence regarding the Louisiana and Florida frauds, I have seen Hewitt pacing the floor of his committee room declaiming against their perfidity. It is said that he sleeps fewer hours than any man in America. Somebody recently told the story of his discomfiture by a crowing rooster in the vicinity of his quarters. He stood it as long as he could and then offered a colored waiter five dollars for "that d—d rooster's head," and it was shortly brought to him like John the Baptist's, on a salver. The thrifty waiter bought the rooster for seventy-five cents and sold the remains to Welcker for fifty cents, which, with five dollars for the head, made a comfortable profit out of the transaction. Money is no object to this sleepless congressman. He is very rich and buys any house that he fancies he can sleep in. One winter he rented elegant quarters here, and then took all the adjoining apartments to prevent being disturbed. In doing this he cut Senator Conkling out of his former quarters, and created an unfriendliness which lasted some time.

Another of the prominent unfortunates is Milton Sayler, who, had he been re-elected, would very likely have succeeded Randall as speaker. A combination of circumstances favored hisselection. Sayler is one of the "good fellows" in public life, whom very body likes, and a man of considerable ability withal, yet he is not essentially a leader, nor in fact a worker. He likes good company, good wine, with ease and comfort. The boys says too that he is not averse to a little game of draw. In habit and disposition Sayler somewhat resembles Carter Harrison, another western member who failed to connect. The Chicago papers facetiously talk about "Our Carter," but here in Washington he is known as "Marine Band Harrison." At the first session of the 44th Congress Hohman of Indiana, and some of the other economists, who have no music in their souls, undertook to cut the item for the support of this band out of the appropriation bills Without that band life at the capital would be reduced to a barren ideality. Harrison took in the situation and rose to the occasion. In an off-hand speech he detailed how he proposed, upon the election of Tilden, to cock his feet upon the balustrades of the White house, and listen to the heavenly music of that band just as the Republicans had done. That settled it. He had created a laugh and saved the band.

Governor Swann, of Maryland, is another of the old stagers who got left. The Governor has been in Congress five terms and wanted to come again; but he got married last summer to a rich old girl, a widow of sixty, and while off courting and honeymooning some of the younger bloods in his district set the pins up against him. The Governor is very rich and most too old to be of great usefulness in Congress. Once in a while he makes a little speech, or at least the Record credits him with doing so, but I doubt if anybody has heard him. When he stands up to talk he is perfectly motionless except a slight movement of the lower jaw, and that is the only sign he is saying anything, as his "still small voice" cannot be heard three feet away. He is a liberal entertainer, and next to Fernando Wood gives the most elaborate dinner parties of any Congressman. These two and Mr. Hewett probably excel any three men ever in Congress in the glorious art of tickling the palates of their friends. "Fernando" is the only one of three who comes back, and he had a tight squeeze, both in the nomination convention and at the polls. He lost caste somewhat with the party by his course during the exciting times of the Electoral Court. It did look strange to see this old Bourbon Democrat hob nobbing with Eugene Hall, and other radicals, and taking the leadership of the Republicans against those of his own party who were determined to defeat the court by filibustering. Hostility to Tilden has been assigned as one of the propelling causes. There is not a greater aristocrat in manner, bearing, and general appearance, than this same Fernandy Wood. He is as straight as a ramrod, while from his dress, dignity, white moustache, and soldierly carriage, one might readily mistake him for Kaiser Wilhelm. If he was ever popular with the rabble, as must have been the case in the palmy days of his career in New York, it was before he married a rich wife, and took to the exclusive ways of bloated bondholders.

On the other side of the house there are quite as many notables to sink from view after March 4th. Eugene Hale is among the first. He is considered a man of fair ability, but his chief prominence as a leader comes from parliamentary knowledge, and a tendency to get on his feet oftener than anybody else. When Blaine was in the House, Hale was such a close follower of his that Cox one day in the heat of debate termed him "Blaine's little Pup"; but the language was withdrawn. The name oftenest applied to him is 'Bub' Hale, and I am not quite certain whether it arose from his relationship to Zach Chandler, or his Lieutenancy to Blaine. Townsend of New York is another of the vanquished. He is the humorist of the Republican side, though there is nothing so very funny in anything he says. It is the vindictive style of humor, if such a designation is permissable. He is a short white haired man of sixty, and a bitter partizan. The only thing funny about him is his grotesque gestures, and the curious way he has of lifting his left leg. Besides these there is Burchard, of Illinois, dress-parade Banks, and last though by no means least, Ben. Butler. But I must cut this thing off somewhere.

PHONO.

THE C. T. A. UNION RALLY IN CARLETON.

The second demonstration of the Union was held on Wednesday evening last in Carleton, in St. Patrick's Hall, and was a great success. The platform was occupied by the Rev. Fr. Connolly; R. J. Ritchie, Esq.; Messrs. J. P. McGrory, Thos. Foley, Jas. Daley, P. J. O'Keefe, W. C. Brawley, F. J. Duffy, P. Gleeson.

The President of the Union, R. J. Ritchie, Esq., presided, and in opening the meeting he made a brief speech, in which he referred to the kindly feelings Catholics must entertain towards their neighbors without distinction of class, creed or color. He said members of the Union must be practical Catholics, and explained the difference between the practical and the nominal Catholic. The means adopted by the Union for the propagation of total abstinence principles is moral suasion and no other means could be used according to the constitution of the Union. For this purpose, therefore, they were here to-night in order that they might stimulate the members of the St. Patrick's society in the future to be more active and vie with members of the other different societies affiliated to the Union in making it a success.

MR. GLEESON

expressed the great pleasure he felt at seeing such a large number of people present. He paid a well deserved compliment to the Very Rev. Fr. Connolly, referred to the length of time he had been a teetotaler and that he was now probably one of the oldest in the Union.

MISS MULDOON

sang very pleasingly "Jennie, the Pride of Kildare," and "Take this Letter to my Mother."

MR. P. J. O'KEEFE

said that the only means which they employed for the suppression of the vice of drunkeness was moral suasion and the success they had met in the past warranted them in pursuing the same course in future. To the Catholic the question of Temperance was not a new one, it was as old as the Church itself. Public meetings of this kind, where they could meet and interchange their ideas, were the means of doing a great deal of good. If there were any present who doubted this they should visit the many homes that have been made happy through their agency. A description by the priest of many of the deathbed scenes which he is too often called on to witness, together with the answer that would be received on inquiry from the many persons who had suffered because of the excesses of some of their friends and relatives, ought to be sufficient to induce everyone who had not yet done so to join some of the total abstinence societies affiliated with the New Brunswick Union.

MR. W. C. BRAWLEY.

said the President in his opening remarks had alluded to him as an imported gentleman. Merchants on the other side of the water sent to importers on this side (they had an importer on the platform) samples of goods, and in some cases the goods were not according to sample and were held subject to their order. Now, how do you like your sample? The applause that greeted this remark ought to have satisfied this gentleman that the sample was approved of. He then referred to the monster that was at work in the community doing his evil deeds and that every effort should be made to checkmate him. He hoped they would remain steadfast to the cause and spoke of the great good that could be done by the ladies because of the influence which they possessed.

MR. F. J. DUFFY

complimented the people of Carleton on their sobriety, and regretted that they had too many on the other side of the harbor to reform. An effort at temperance reform was made in Ireland a number of years ago. A few Quakers succeeded in enlisting in the cause Rev. Theobald Mathew, whose efforts had almost ruined the whiskey trade. The famine to a great extent destroyed much of the excellent work accomplished; but it was not all lost, however, as no doubt there were many persons to be found on both sides of the harbor who had taken the pledge from Father Mathew and had not violated it. Those who had done so had not regretted it.

MR. R. J. RITCHIE

hoped that the speeches which had been delivered during the evening would have the effect of stimulating the members of the Society to renewed efforts. How glad the Irish settler would be forty years ago to have the advantages that are now so easily obtained by becoming members of some of these societies. Every Catholic should take an active part in the movement. Carleton was known at home and abroad for its hard working, sober honest people. He concluded by thanking the band publicly for their services both on this and a previous occasion.

REV. THOS. CONNOLLY, V. G.,

was the next speaker. He regretted that the hour was not a little younger and that he also was not a little younger. It was very encouraging to have such a large and appreciative audience present, and taking the entertainment altogether, the bitter with the sweet, it was very creditable to all concerned in getting it up. Some reference having been made by some of the previous speakers to the words Catholic and Charity, he would also refer to them. Even amongst Catholics there are some who do not understand their meaning. As we are Christians we are all the followers of Christ and we must love every one. You cannot find anyone on earth whom Christ does not love. He referred to the temples that had been built since the fire, not to the temple of God, but to the temple of wine. We heard no grumbling about the taxes paid for the erection of those places, bnt if it was for a church or a school-house, we should never hear the end of it. He explained the pledge and referred to the strong temptation some have to violate it because they are led away by the evil one. If the desire for strong drink does not come to an end before the day of judgment it will the day after, but as long as the world exists there would be drunkards. The time to stop drunkeness is not to begin it at all. He paid a compliment to the consistency of Hon. Mr. Tilley as a temperance man. He referred to the ruin and desolation which would come upon those who either told it or took it into their own body, and concluded a very able and interesting address by pointing out the efficacy of prayer, and said that Catholics had nothing whatever to do with restrictive laws, but rather with moral suasion and by prayer and sacrafice to do away with the abomination of desolation.

During the evening the Carleton Band rendered in a very satisfactory manner some of their choicest selections.

The next rally is to be held on Wednesday evening next, in St. Malachi's Hall, when it is proposed to have a torchlight procession.

CANADA'S WELCOME.

BY MRS. BEATRICE MCGOWAN.

Fair daughter of Windsor, how welcome thou art!
Our dear Royal Mother must know, when to part
With thee thus, to our homes, show'd infinite trust
In Canada's loyalty. Happen what must
In the way of our welcome, this, O believe,
That our hopes and our hearts are thine to receive.

Up! up with the standard, each man to his post!
Shout Canada's welcome and Canada's boast—
That this one happy day, of her future the birth,
She shall rank 'mid the greatest of nations on earth,
Then, belch out, ye cannon, your thundering tongues.
Shout out, ye million, with great, loyal lungs!
Up, up with the flags, let them flutter afar!
Flash out, ye armies, in mimics of war!
Give them a greeting, ye sons of the fleet!
Pour out your broadsides—your welcome repeat!
Clash out, ye music, in merriest style,
With the anthem of England, the pipes of Argyll.

To the fore, all ye Campbells! your greetings be seen
To the head of your clan and the child of your Queen,
Ring out, ye bells, thro' this one happy hour!
Waft them a message of love, not of pow'r!
Give them a welcome, each life of the air!
Pour on them, Nature, all things that are fair!
Flash out, ye myraids of lights, on the night!
Proud Halifax quivers and glows in the might
Of her thrice happy privilege.

Lady of Lorne,
On ev'ry breath of a nation is borne,
A deep, fervent blessing for thee and for thine—
Thy brave, noble husband. O, may the Divine,
The Omnipotent Pow'r that shelters the throne,
Be near thee, and guide thee, and make thee our own—
Our own Royal Princess. God brighten the sheen
That encircles the life-path of Canada's Queen!
And grant thee all grace. That our hearts be thy spoil
That, when in the future, Canadian soil
Shall fade, from thine eyes, as the mist from the sea
That absence will make us but dearer to thee,
May no night ever come to the bright, sunny morn
Of Canada's welcome, fair household of Lorne.
