It is apparent that in some places the members of the railroad brotherhoods are after more than an eight-hour day. For instance, in King's Co., Wash., the railway unions have endorsed James McCabe, a former member of the Enginemen and Firemen, as a non-partizan candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, and they fully expect to elect him. They are also proposing to run a member for Congress when the next opportunity occurs. In other words, they want to own their proper share of the earth they live on.

The Plumbers' Union of Hannibal, Mo., declines to accept the strike settlement offered by their employers, which would pledge the plumbers to work for no employer who is not a member of the Master Plumbers' Association. The strikers insist that any competent journeyman is welcomed to membership in their organization, but they will not tie themselves up that employment depends upon membership in an organization in which they have no voice.

Shop men employed by the Coal and Coke Railway, in Indianapolis, Ind., have secured a federated agreement which increases wages for every employe 2 cents an hour and upward. The agreement was witnessed by a representative of the federal department of labor. This official was called in by the company and Vice-President Nolte of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, says: "This would indicate that the department is being recognized by the employers, also, as a great factor in the adjustment of disputes.
