THAT DEAR OLD HAT.

Dealer's in men's hats always experience a difficulty in the introduction of new styles, which is only overcome entirely about the time another new shape is coming in. There are of course, always a few of the ultra nobby young men who purchase the very latest thing in the market, but in this great mass of masculine humanity on whom the hatter in reality depends, is slow to adopt the change which fashion dictates in the matter of stiles. This is true to a certain extent of all men (except the swells), but especially to of the middle aged and those advanced in years To them an old hat is an old friend; it has shielded their heads from storm and sunshine for many days and they love it. When placed on the head it settles to its place at once, and feels natural and comfortable, pressing with gentle equality around the whole circumference of the cranium in a sort of affectionate caress. But alas! each successive alternation of rain and shine leaves its indelible traces upon it. It grows shabbier and more shabby. The gloss and knap disappear slowly, but surely the rim becomes limb and the crown caves in. The reflection of its distorted shape in the shop windows, as the wearer hurries to business warns him that it must be replaced, but he procrastinates. He will attend to it soon—sets a day, perhaps—which he allows to pass on the ground that he has no time to spare, a piece of sophistry which he tries in vain to make himself believe. Finally some friends suggests that he will see something to his advantage if he will visit a hat store. Then his wife tells him that it is a disgrace for a christian to be seen on the street under such an utter dilapidated thing as that which he terms his hat. This is generally effectual, but there have been cases known where nothing but the liberal use of a pair of scissors on the objectionable hat would bring about its casting off Then at last he goes to the hatter. As he lays the old friend down among the many new ones strewn around and compares its rusty appearance with the sleek freshness of its surroundings he wonders mentally how he could have worn it so long. The suave salesman inquires what size he wears and hands him one to try on. He gazes at it reflectively inside and out and places it on his head. The unaccustomed outline reflected back from the mirror offends his vision and jars harshly on his mind. He pulls it forward and pushes it back, glances at it sideways and twists his neck in a vain endeavor to see how it looks from behind. It won't do. Another is tried and another till the entire stock is gone through. One is too high, another too low; the brim of this too wide, of that too narrow. Finally one is chosen in desperation and the price inquired. It strikes him as pretty high, but the salesman assures him that it is a remarkably fine hat and becomes him exceedingly. so he pays for it, and giving directions to have the old one sent him to wear on rainy days, walks out, feeling very strange and uncomfortable. They take it off, and try it on themselves, ask what it cost, tell him it doesn't look very well on him, and enquire "has he worn it yet" This continues until himself and friends have grown accustomed to it which does not take a very long time. After it has been worn a few weeks there comes along a rainy day and he thinks he will wear the old one. It is taken from the paper in which it was returned from the store. but somehow it don't look just right. He tries it on and consults a looking glass. What change is this which has come over his old friend? it looks more strangely even than did the new one when first donned. He won't wear such a looking thing as that if it rains pitchforks. The affection which he once bore it is cold and dead, so it is consigned to the closet and eventually given to some tramp or beggar. The new one now occupies its place, and is worn so long that it too becomes dear and dingy, twining itself with ever-increasing softness around his head and heart until at last with the same reluctance with which it was received it is discarded.

AN INDIAN STORY.

The rapid growth of Northern Illinois commenced at the conclusion of the war of 1812. The log hut of the Indians suddenly disappeared, the smoke of the wigwams no longer ascended towards the heavens.

The rapid improvement commenced by the white man had driven them into the prairies, and the wigwams were no longer pitched in the vicinity of the towns, except when they came to barter their furs for goods. The music of the saw, axe and hammer had driven the game far away.

The Indian's land east of the Mississippi had already been ceded to the Government by treaty, and the red man only dwelt there by the consent of the Government. When the Indians went away I went with them; I took up my quarters at the head waters of the Wisseba, at the junction of two important streams, tributaries to the great father of waters, and opened my store for trade.

After exposing my goods, in all their Indian varieties, for some days without any success in selling, I became almost discouraged, and nearly concluded to give it up. The Indians would come into my store by dozens, and after examining my goods, go away without purchasing. They had plenty of shu-ne-ah (money) and furs but bought no goods, and the reason was a mystery to me.

At length the chief of the nation came in company with a crowd of Indians. He instantly exclaimed, "How do, Thomas? Come, show me nice goods. What do you ask for this? I'll take four yards of calico three coon skins for one yard—half a dollar exactly—by'm by, tomorrow, I'll pay you."

The next day he came, accompanied by his whole band. His blanket above his waist was stuffed with coon skins. "American, I will pay that bill now," said the Indian.

Suiting the action to the word he began to pull the skins from his blanket, and counting out twelve, held the thirteenth in his hand, and finally laid it upon the rest, exclaiming, "That's it exactly." I gave it back to him—long has he owed me but twelve, and the Great spirit would not let me cheat him. We continued to pass it back and forth, each one asserting that it belonged to the other. At last he appeared satisfied, and gave me a scrutinizing look; then placing the skin within the folds of his blanket, he stepped to the door, and with a yell cried, "Come!—come in, all you, and trade with the pale face—he's honest—he will not cheat the Indian, he believes in the Great Spirit—his heart is big, he is an honest trader."

He then turned to me and said, "If you had taken that one coon skin, I and my people would have had nothing to do with you, and would have driven you away like a dog; but now I have found that you are the Indian's friend, and we shall be yours."

The Indians then began flocking into the store and to trade, and before the sun had gone down, I was waist deep in furs, and shu-ne-ah in plenty. That one coon skin saved me.

RICH SILVER DISCOVERY IN DAKOTA.

Some time ago an old prospector named Redpath found some float rock on the hills about ten miles from Deadwood city, which he thought was pure carbonate He brought it to the city, had it assayed, and found that it went up to the thousands of ounces of silver to the ton. He also showed it to old Colorado miners, who pronounced it the pure stub, and were very anxious to discover where it came from. There was a great deal of mystery at first, in a short time it took possession of everybody, and the stampede of the season was inaugurated.

The ground on which the discovery was made was in a wild portion of the country that had never been prospected There were no roads to the point, and the first crowd of treasure hunters made their way there on horseback or foot. They came back with specimens of rich rock, and in a day or two Deadwood Central City, and Lead City were almost depopulated. A town was laid out, lots drawn by all, present rules of government agreed to, and the place named "West Virginia City." In 48 hours the town contained nearly 1,000 inhabitants and nine saloons were in operation. On the third day two faro banks were opened, restaurants were started, and, to cap the climax on the fourth day the first copy of a daily newspaper named the Carbonate Reporter, was issued Forty buildings were erected in one week, and as high as $500 has been paid for building lots. The town promises to be permanent as there have been many rich finds.

A COUGH, COLD OR SORE THROAT should be stopped. Neglect frequently results in an incurable Lung Disease or Consumption. BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES do not disorder the stomach like cough syrups and balsams, but act directly on the inflamed parts, allaying irritation, give relief in Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs, Catarrh, and the Throat Troubles which Singers and Public Speakers are subject to. For thirty years Brown's Bronchial Troches have been recommended by physicians, and always given perfect satisfaction. Having been tested by wide and constant use for nearly an entire generation, they have attained well-merited rank among the havetable remedies of the age. Sold at 25 cents a bottle everywhere

The Great American Remedy for COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, LOSS OF VOICE, HOARSENESS AND THROAT AFFECTIONS.

Prepared from the finest Red Spruce Gum. (Delicious Flavor) Balsamic, Soothing, Expectorant and Tonic. Superior to any medicine offered for all the above complaints. A scientific combination of the Gum which exudes from the Red Spruce tree—without doubt the most valuable native Gum for Medicinal purposes.

Every one has heard of the wonderful effects of the Spruces and the Pines in cases of Lung Disease. In France the physicians regularly send their consumptive patients to the pine woods and order them to drink a tea made from the Spruce tops.

GRAY'S SYRUP OF RED SPRUCE GUM.

In this preparation the Gum never separates, and all its anti-spasmodic, expectorant, tonic, and balsamic properties are preserved. The Syrup, carefully prepared at a low temperature, contains a large quantity of the finest picked Gum in complete solution.

Its remarkable power in relieving certain forms of Bronchitis, and its almost specific effect in curing obstinate hacking Coughs, is now well known to the public at large.

Sold by all respectable chemists. Price, 25 and 50 cents a bottle.

The words "Syrup of Red Spruce Gum" constitute our Registered Trade Mark, and our wrapper and labels are also registered.
