Our Wish

That all the children will be made happy this Christmas. 'Tis their right--but to all of us of maturer minds let us send our earnest thoughts and best wishes to our brave boys overseas and at the front, that all may be well with them.

Sincerely yours,

Additional evidence that the note of President Wilson suggesting peace to the belligerent powers is part of the program of the League to Enforce Peace is furnished by the news that Switzerland has sent a note of similar purport in support of the action of Washington. The note has made France indignant. Her soil must first be freed. When the Germans began forming the league in Switzerland it was part of the scheme, instead of having the neutrals virtually threaten force, as the United States has done, to have them threaten an embargo on exports to the powers refusing to consent to entering upon peace negotiations. Germany supposed that the allies would not consent to heeding the suggestions of the neutrals and that their placing of an embargo on supplies to belligerents would be of immense assistance to her. Instead of threatening an embargo, President Wilson virtually threatened war, a course not provided for in the German scheme. This accounts for the withdrawal of the first statement of Lansing, that the United States might be involved in hostilities, after Lansing had an interview with Count Von Bernstorff. Except for the allusion to employing force, the note might just as well have been written by the German ambassador. In the meanwhile real Americans are not desirous of supporting Germany and they are endeavoring to frustrate the Wilson-Lansing-Bernstorff scheme. Another league to enforce peace has been formed in Holland. It is not certain whether it has induced the Dutch Government to send a peace note to the belligerents or not. If Holland goes to war with the allies with this chimerical idea of enforcing peace she will run the risk of losing her rich East Indian possessions.

If any person is desirous of studying the latest form of German propaganda he should read an article in the November Atlantic Monthly. This is written by a Dutchman, who, by his estimates of Great Britain, is evidently one of those German agents whose weird appraisals of British character probably had as much to do as anything with the German decision to make war on Europe in the belief that Great Britain was too pacifist and too degenerate to interfere. Some harsh words are said about Germany, but the lying charges, evil report and malicious estimates of character are reserved for the section of the article dealing with the British Empire. The argument is that neutrals cannot afford to allow the belligerents to fight the war to a conclusion on the ground that a victory for one or other group would be detrimental to the interests of neutrals. The Atlantic Monthly is one of those American magazines whose exclusion would benefit this country.

Von Mackensen is apparently going to cross the Danube from the Dobrudja again, this time on both sides of Tultcha. The Russian forces, which appear to lack adequate gun power, have withdrawn under the pressure of the enemy to the northern portion of this province. The Teutons are also assailing the Russians in Rumania. They are conducting violent attacks in the region of Galberenul and Drogul, where they are supported by a violent artillery fire. It is there that they have evidently concentrated the bulk of their heavy artillery.

* * * * *

In the Carpathians the Russians continue to make important gains. They report the capture of trenches on the heights north of the Cussa River, in the wooded Carpathians. The Germans admit a Russian success in another place, the Magyaros range, north of the Uzul Valley, where they have gained a footing on the summit. Thus, while the battle between the Carpathians and the Danube is still somewhat favorable to the Teutons, they are steadily losing ground in the mountains. In some places the Russian progress will be down hill. When the Slavs get well down towards the Transylvanian foot hills, it will be time for the Russions to launch a vigorous offensive in Rumania. In the meantime they are fighting for the purpose of causing the Germans as great losses as possible.

On the British and French fronts trench warfare and raiding, with violent artillery duels, continue in progress. Otherwise the situation is unmodified.

Merry Christmas

The happiest Christmas will be to those who have done some deed of kindness to some one who needed it. Make some one think the world is round and fair, by showing it is not all one-sided.

A sense of having done "something at least" is the reward of those who have sent some deserving person a dollar's worth of Lawrence's Bread Tickets.
