Filling His Place.

It wasn't much of a place he filled,
But he tilled and ploughed and he ploughed and tilled,
While the greatest cause for his soul's unrest
Was a fear that he wouldn't do his best.
So he smiled at his work and went ahead
With a tuneful heart and a Christian grace,
It wasn't much of a place he filled,
But he filled his place.

The hands that they folded yesterday
On his breast were rough and hard—but say,
What does it matter, let me ask,
If they did get rough at a humble task?
For when life gets to the very end
And death looks up from the pallid face,
What does it matter the place you filled,
If you filled your place.

I fancy the joy of Paradise,
When it's given out, will cause some surprise,
For the greatest will fall, or I'm no seer,
To those that did simple duties here;
To the man who smiles and who goes ahead
With a tuneful heart and a Christian grace,
Though it wasn't much of a place he filled,
If he filled his place.

A Pardon.

'You, boy! Come out o' that and help bring on the wood.'

So called the mate of a steamboat on the Mississippi to a pale faced boy lying in his bunk. It was at night, and the weather was stormy.

'I can't; I'm sick.'

'You hain't goin' to work yer passage on this yere boat sojern there. Git up, I say and carry your load.'

The boy made a feeble attempt to rise, but failed. The mate seized a stick of wood and held it over the invalid.

'You git up, or I'll brain you!'

Fear gave the boy additional strength, and he managed to pull himself out and stagger over the gang plank to a wood pile which the deck hands were transferring to the boat. He worked as best he could till the task was finished, then crawled back to his bunk and fell fainting into it.

This boy, Robert Stewart, was so poor that in order to get from New Orleans to St. Louis he was obliged to work his passage on a steamboat. The mate was a powerful man, and the boy, who was ill with a fever, was completely at his mercy. What made the act still more brutal was that there were plenty of deck hands to do the work without calling out a sick boy. There was something fiendish in the mate's nature that led him to this act of cruelty.

Years passed, meanwhile. That sick boy was moving in one direction, while the mate who had tyrannized over him and had nearly cost him his life was moving in another. The one was rising, the other sinking. Schooled in adversity, Robert Stewart had that within him which enabled him to triumph over obstacles, the hardships he had endured furnished a spur to send him onward and upward. Successful in his own affairs, the people intrusted him with theirs. In time his name became known to every one in Missouri. He rose to be governor.

One day a man was brought to the governor from the penitentiary as an applicant for pardon. He was a large, powerful fellow, and the moment the governor looked at him he started. Then he scrutinized the criminal long and closely. Without speaking he turned to his desk, picked up the paper on which the man's pardon had been made out and wrote his name at the bottom of it. Before handing it to the prisoner he said to him:

'I fear it will be useless, perhaps wrong, for me to grant you this pardon.'

The man stood stolidly waiting to know the governor's reason.

'You will commit some other crime and be sent to the penitentiary again.'

'No, governor; I promise you that I will not.'

The governor looked doubtful. He was apparently turning something over in his mind. Finally he said:

'You will go back on the river—as mate on a steamer, I suppose.'

'Yes, governor; I'll go back to work at any position I can get.'

'Well,' the governor continued, 'before I pard on you I wish you to make me a promise.'

The man looked interested and waited. The chief magistrate was in no hurry. The mass of business awaiting his attention was forgotten in this pardon case. There must be something in it to move him so strangely. For a few minutes there was a far-away look in his eyes. He seemed to be picturing something. That it was a painful scene was quite evident from his expression. Then he turned to the criminal and said impressively:

'I wish you to pledge your word that when you go back to the river as mate on a steamboat you will never drive a sick boy from his bunk to load your boat on a stormy night.'

The criminal looked at the governor in a vain attempt to understand why he imposed upon him such a singular condition. Then he made the required promise, asking at the same time for an explanation. Finally the governor gave it:

'One night, many years ago, you were mate of a steamboat running between New Orleans and St. Louis. On that boat was a boy sick with the fever. One night when the wind blew cold and the rain came down in torrents you drove that boy out of his bunk and forced him to carry wood.

'Now, there are two reasons why I don't wish you to do that again. The first is that I desire any boy you might so treat to escape your cruelty. Another time it might cost him his life. The second is that he might become governor of his state and you might commit another crime and come before him with an application for pardon.'

The man stood looking at the governor, a faint glimmer of memory in his brain. But with a life of so many brutal acts behind him it was hard for him to remember one which at the time he had considered of so little importance.

The governor handed him his pardon.

'I was that boy,' he said. 'That document is my revenge. But another time the governor's revenge might be of a different kind. The pardoning power is lodged in the chief magistrate alone, and another governor might see it to refuse clemency. Go! Try to earn an honest living without brutality.'

The man shuffled away, but whether or not the lesson had any effect on him there is no available record.

Eczema Not a Blood Disease

For this reason internal treatments fail to cure—Success of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Experience with the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment will soon convince anyone that Eczema is a disease of the skin and not of the blood.

Mr. A. D. Macauley, Stornoway, Que., writes,—"I had itching eczema on my leg for over five years and tried many remedies and several doctors without benefit. Dr. Chase's Ointment cured me completely."

Mrs. Chas. Gilbert, Haystack, Placentia Bay, Nfld., writes,—"I was a sufferer from Salt Rheum for ten years and was cured by eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment. I am heartily thankful for this cure and want to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to other sufferers."

Why not get the cure started to-day. If you are a sufferer from eczema or any form of itching skin disease you will thank the day you heard of Dr. Chase's Ointment. 60 cts. a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Bad.

The full report of Mr. Taft's recent speech at New York is more objectionable to Canadians than the brief digest published in this country. At the outset he declared that the people of the United States need not adhere to the reciprocity agreement if it did not work out to their advantage. That is to say, Canada might read, just its whole business machinery to American trade channels, and then have the entire economic situation upset by a new turn of public opinion across the line.

'I have said that this was a critical time in the solution of the question of reciprocity. It is critical because unless it is now decided favorably to reciprocity it is exceedingly probable that no such opportunity will ever again come to the United States. The forces which are at work in England and in Canada separate her by a Chinese wall from the United States and to make her part of an imperial commercial band, reaching from England round the world to England again, by a system of preferential tariffs, will derive an impetus from the rejection of this treaty, and if we would have reciprocity with all the advantages that I have described and that I earnestly and sincerely believe will follow its adoption, we must take it now, or give it up forever.'

This passage no doubt reflects Mr. Taft's real purpose in protecting the reciprocity agreement. If the United States can detach Canada from the Empire fiscally and commercially the republic will benefit greatly. Without Canada the British Empire goes toward ultimate and inevitable dissolution.—The News, Toronto.

Longing for Country Life.

A strange thing, and yet not wholly strange when we come to think of it, is the universal longing of professional men and others who have prospered as they advance in life, to get back to the country. It is seldom that they do return, and when they do there is often disappointment, for things do not appear as they did years ago. The change is in the man himself, but he thinks it is in the country.

Nevertheless, the desire to get back to the old country place to end one's days is very general, and many a millionaire would gladly give one-half his fortune to go back to the old homestead for one week and find it just as he left it—oh, how many years ago. Sir Walter Scott refers to this and compares the course of the man through the world to that of the hare which is started from his barrow and, after a long chase, and making a large circle, ends by returning to the nest from which he started.

And even though they do not return in life, many who have made for themselves in the great cities prefer to be laid finally to rest in the quiet churchyard near their old homes.

A Thought For To-day.

Make up your mind when grief comes to you that you have no right to sit down and nurse your heavy, aching heart. No one has a right to make her grief a burden to the rest of the world. To think this may give you no consolation, while the sorrow is fresh, but when the intense grief has quieted a little, try and remember how many other sorrows there are, and compare your own with them. To try and busy yourself in making others happy, relieving some other burden bearer, is the way to find happiness.

By refusing to listen to secrets one is saved unlimited trouble.

Avoiding Flavors in Milk.

The making of good butter begins with the milking of the cow; the milking must not be done near a hog pen or where there are other undesirable odors, for milk will absorb flavors and odors quicker than any other substance. The udder of the cow should be wiped with a damp cloth before milking, for this will keep loose hairs and bacteria from falling into the pail. Do not wipe the udder with a dry hand for this will set free hair and bacteria that will settle in the pail while milking. These bacteria and bad odors make the butter poor. By using a little care this source of danger can be avoided.

School Book Prices.

The big differences in prices of the school books of Nova Scotia and Ontario are shown by the following table:—

Book	Price in N. S.	Price in Ont.
Set of readers	$2 20	.49
Grammar	.30	.10
Copy book	.07	.02
Arithmetic	.45	.25
Spelling book	.25	.10
Health reader	.50	.20
Geography	1 25	.60

Hon. A. K. Maclean said in the bye-election of 1909 that the prices in Nova Scotia could not be reduced. Premier Murray, at the recent convention of Pictou Liberals, intimated that he had done all he could do. He shelters himself behind the advisory board which says that the old contract for school readers 'was the best that could have been made at the time.'

Note the words 'at the time.'

That was nine years ago.

Things have happened since then. The whole question of school book prices has been turned upside down and inside out since 1902.

The Ontario government has done all its splendid work for the people since 1906, and the New Brunswick government has done similar work since 1908.

The premiers of Ontario and New Brunswick are men of action.

They do not sit and suck their thumbs.

The poor old men of the Nova Scotia government seem paralyzed.

While they remain inactive, halting and hesitating, backing and filling, the little province of P. E. Island is getting ready to give its people cheap school books.

And, amusing thing, the Nova Scotia Simon Slows are going to send somebody over to P. E. Island to find out what the government there intends to do!

There is only one remedy for this miserable condition of affairs, and that the defeat of the Murray government.

The Joys of Life.

'Roses and violets are still on earth, The sun and moon still reign in heaven. You possess these things, and more innumerable.'—Charles Lamb.

Very few of us seem capable of extracting all the joys from life. We do our duty, but we do it mournfully; we seem to have forgotten that 'it is a comely fashion to be glad.'

How often the best of us feel depressed and dispirited. Life appears a long, dull path, stretching on flatly through a waste, with no flowers or refreshing fountains to brighten our way. Our daily work appears dull and uninteresting, our pleasures few and far between, and hardly 'worth while.'

'I feel so depressed,' we complain, and sometimes seem to take a strange pride in the fact. We appear to think there is something rather worthy of commendation in constantly brooding over the troubles and drawbacks of life.

But really, when we suffer from this form of soul sickness, what we should do is to make every effort to be cured. We need to remember that depression very often means selfishness; and the lack of interest in our surroundings invariably brings discontent.

It is the careful people in the world who do the most good to others.

So, somehow or other, let us resolve to be cheerful. And it ought not to be a hard matter.

For, although we may call life 'dull' and 'difficult' and 'rough,' and many other ugly names, we must not forget that it may also be beautiful and absorbingly interesting. It all depends on the point of view from which we look at it.

Oh! world, as God made it, all is beauty,
And knowing this is love, and love is duty,
What further may be looked for or desired!

An Irish harvester found himself in a small Scottish town. At the gas works he saw a gasometer for the first time in his life and stopped a countryman who was passing to ask, 'What's that big round thing there standing on end.'

The Scotchman scratched his head and replied, 'A dinna ken.'

'Get out with you,' said the Irishman. 'You never saw a dinner can as big as that in your life.'

Guest (to hostess at private theatricals)—Madam, you played your part splendidly. It fits you to perfection. Hostess—I'm afraid not. A young and pretty woman is needed for that part. Guest—Oh, but madam, you have postively proved the contrary.

The Ottawa Journal, that has been in favor of the Reciprocity pact heretofore is now out strongly against Reciprocity, and largely on account of President Taft's objectionable reference to Imperial trade, and the connection of Canada thereto.

Indigestion Rightly Cured Stays Cured

Not by Treating the Symptons but by Toning up the Stomach to do Nature's Work.

Indigestion should not be neglected for by depriving the body of its proper nourishment it grows steadily worse. Neither stimulating medicines, which ruin the already weak stomach by making it work beyond its strength, should be used, nor predigested foods, which do not excite a flow of the digestive fluids, and by disuse cause the stomach to grow weaker. Nowhere is the tonic treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills more clearly useful. Its principle is to enable the stomach to do its own work by building up the blood and giving tone to the nerves. When these are once more restored to their normal health indigestion disappears and the cure is permanent. In proof of these statements we give the experience of Mrs. Paul Gannon, Star City, Sask., who says: 'For more than a year I suffered with all the terrible pains of indigestion, and my life was one of the greatest misery. It did not seem to make any difference whether I ate or not, the pains were always there, often accompanied by a severe bloating and a belching of wind. I did not even get relief at night, and sometimes hardly got a bit of sleep in my misery. I tried many remedies said to cure indigestion, but they did me not one particle of good and I fully expected that I would always be afflicted in this way. At this time my brother came home on a visit and he urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and got six boxes for me. By the time I had taken four boxes I began to improve and could eat with some relish. I was greatly cheered, and continued taking the Pills until all traces of the trouble had disappeared and I could once more eat all kinds of food without the smallest inconvenience. We have since used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in our family for other troubles. I am so firmly convinced of their virtue as a family medicine that I have no hesitation in recommending them to all weak, ailing people.'

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.
