DANGER FROM DOGBITE.

[From the New York Tribune.]

Medical science has done so much to do away with the old dangers of hydrophobia that there is no justification in these days for wild alarms over the bites of dogs whether they are rabid or not. As a matter of reasonable precaution a prompt visit to the nearest doctor or drug store may be advisable, and the swift application of the cautery may do no harm, and may tend to relieve anxiety. But how many dog catchers ever died from wounds inflicted by raging beasts? And yet they were often bitten. A half century ago the most frenzied of mad dog scares sometimes swept over even entire states. People are cooler and calmer and more reasonable now in some things than they were then.

CASTOR OIL FOR MOSQUITOES.

Youth's Companion: In Venezuela the castor oil plant growing around houses is believed to keep mosquitoes away. In that country the plant grows to the size of a tree, and is perennial, whereas in more temperate climates it attains a height of only four or five feet. But United States Consul Plumacher, at Maracaibo, thinks the plant would be equally effective against mosquitoes anywhere. By keeping the branches and seeds of the plants in a room, he says, the pests are driven away.

These Symptoms Are A Warning to You

That the blood is losing its richness and the very life itself is being sapped from brain and nerves. You feel weak and run down. You get pale and sallow, with dark rings under the eyes. You lose flesh and the food you eat does not seem to nourish you. Your hands and feet get cold. You are nervous and irritable. Little things worry you. You suffer with a headache, neuralgia and nervous dyspepsia. You grow melancholy and depressed at times, find your memory failing and feel unable to concentrate your thoughts.

This is the train of symptoms which lead to nervous prostration and paralysis or land their victim in the epileptic hospital or insane asylum. Nearly everybody needs a nerve restorative and blood builder at certain periods in his life. When nerve cells are being wasted away more rapidly than nature can replace them collapse is certain, unless some means is used to assist in enriching the blood and creating new nerve force. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the most effective preparation attainable for thoroughly restoring richness to the blood and strength and vitality to the nervous system.

SHORTS IN A CORNER.

"Yes," said young Mr. Bashful to his best girl, "the stock market has been through considerable excitement of late."

"Oh, yes," the girl responded, eager to take part in conversation on a topic which interested her Adolphus. "I have read a lot about it in the paper—all about those dreadful bulls and bears and things."

"Yes," Adolphus went on, "they got the shorts in a corner and effectually squeezed them."

"Did they?"

"Yes."

"I think," the demure maid added, after a few minutes' meditation, "that if I ever become a speculator I shall be a short."

A few minutes later she found it was not necessary to speculate in stock in order to be treated as a short.

QUAINT FORMS OF OTHER DAYS

Trial of Earl Russell a Picturesque Affair.

Peers Held That He Had Already Suffered Much and Made Sentence Light.

London, July 19.—The trial of Earl Russell began at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, and was carried on with all the quaint and middle-age ceremonies. The arguments lasted one hour. Both the Earl and Countess Russell and their counsels pleaded they did not know they were doing wrong, but had acted on the best legal advice obtainable in Nevada. The Peers reached their decision after consideration of the case lasting twenty minutes.

The scene in the royal gallery, temporarily converted into a court of justice, when the lord high chancellor, Lord Halsbury, who had been appointed lord high steward for the occasion, took his seat upon the dais and the quaint ceremonial commenced, was most picturesque. The hall was a magnificent blaze of color, produced by the robes of the peers, the academic robes of the judges and the brilliant uniforms of high state officers. Although the House of Lords was not represented in its full strength, about 200 of Earl Russell's peers attended his trial, and made an imposing array as they filed into the hall, two by two, from behind the throne. Lord Salisbury, the premier, brought up the rear of the procession, and was almost unnoticed as he took his seat near Lord Halsbury. Immediately beneath the latter's dais sat the ten judges in their gorgeous robes, surrounded by a phalanx of lesser legal luminaries. On either side of the judges were ranged five benches filled with peers, whose rank was distinguished by the varying number of rows of ermine and gold lace on their scarlet mantles. The benches reserved for peeresses were amply filled, while the space allotted to distinguished strangers was crowded with diplomats and their families, including the United States ambassador, Joseph H. Choate, and the secretary of the United States embassy, Henry White.

SERIES OF QUAINT CEREMONIES.

Mollie Cooke, otherwise Mrs. Somerville, Earl Russell's present wife, entered the hall by ticket and sat facing the benches occupied by members of the House of Commons. She appeared no more concerned than the other witnesses of the interesting scene.

The court was formally opened by a series of quaint ceremonies, and the exchange of stately phrases prescribed in the ancient legal procedure. Beside Lord Halsbury, in his earl's robes and a full-bottomed wig, stood General Sir Michael Biddulph, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, and William Henry Weldon, Esq., the Norroy King of Arms, in a resplendent tunic.

"Our Sovereign Lord and King," shouted the Norroy King of Arms, "charges and commands all manner of persons to keep silence on pain of imprisonment."

Another official, on bended knee, handed the commission to the lord high chancellor, who, while handing it back to another kneeling clerk, said: "Let all be uncovered while the commission is read."

After the necessary formalities, Earl Russell was conducted to the bar. He was dressed in a gray suit and wore a red tie. He calmly surveyed his judges and his peers. Then a clerk of parliament cried loudly: "John Francis Stanley, Earl Russell, come forth and surrended to bail or forfeit recognizances."

Black Rod, bedecked with medals and in uniform, approached the bar, which was raised as the earl drew near, and surrendered Earl Russell. Upon reaching his appointed seat, Earl Russell stood leaning against the table, and then made obeisance three times to the lord high steward. He remained with bowed head until the latter addressed the accused. Then the indictment was read by the clerk, who concluded with these words:

GUILTY OR NOT GUILTY?

"How say you, my lord, guilty of felony, or not guilty?"

Before Earl Russell could answer, his counsel objected to the indictment, on the ground that the alleged offense was committed outside of the dominions of his Majesty King Edward.

During the course of the technical and the tiresome argument by the earl's counsel, the prosecution summoned Judge Corler, of Nevada, within the bar to confer on certain points raised in counsel's argument.

After the reply of the prosecution to the argument of counsel for the defense, Earl Russell, in a voice scarcely audible, pleaded guilty.

His counsel then addressed the house in mitigation, pleading the accused had acted upon the best legal advice obtainable in Nevada, that the offense was merely technical, and that no harm had been done Mollie Cooke.

Lord Russell then addressed the house in the same strain, saying the decree obtained in the United States gave social sanction to the new marriage. Earl Russell said he proposed to remarry Mollie Cooke as early as possible. Concluding, he said that he had acted in ignorance, and with no intention of willingly defying the law.

The peers retired to consider their verdict. When they had reassembled the lord high steward called for the prisoner. The whole house rose to its feet when the lord high steward proceeded to deliver the judgment.

KING'S RIGHT TO LEGISLATE.

After intimating his opinion relative to the defendant's plea that the court had no jurisdiction in the matter, that King Edward had a right to legislate for his subjects all over the world, Lord Halsbury commented on the historic name of Russell. While the crime could not be passed over, said the lord high steward, at the same time there were several mitigating circumstances. Lord Russell had passed through long periods of troubles; he had experienced extreme provocation and suffered much torture. In consideration of, and as a result of these circumstances, their lordships, not desiring to inflict the full penalty upon Lord Russell, had unanimously decided that justice would be satisfied by his being imprisoned in Holloway prison for three months as a criminal in the first division.

Lord Russell then passed out of the house in company of the yeoman usher of the black rod. Near the door of the house, Mollie Cooke joined her husband, and before he was removed to Holloway prison the couple were allowed to confer in a room near the royal gallery.

The commission was then dissolved by the high lord steward breaking his wand of office, and thus dispersed.

In anticipation of the arrival of Lord Russell, the officials of Holloway prison have prepared for his reception rooms formally occupied by Wm. T. Stead, the editor, and members of the Jameson raiders. It is a commodious apartment, in which his lordship can be supplied with his own food and wines.
