A Man Splits his Wife's Head Open with an Axe and Cuts the Throats of his Children.

HAMILTON, ONT., June 12.

The most frightful murder that ever took place in this city occurred this morning at half-past six o'clock, resulting in the death of two children and very nearly that of the mother. The facts of the case are as follows:—Thos. Fields, an Englishman, employed as a labourer on the G. W. Railway, and residing with his wife and two children in a small house in rear of 161 James street north, this morning, struck his wife on the head with with an axe. She made her escape, but not before she had received a cut which may prove fatal, and went to Dr. Mullen's to get her head dressed. During her absence the brutal husband went up stairs where the children were in bed asleep and cut their throats with a large knife literally from ear to ear, mutilating them in a horrible manner. One of the victims is a little boy 14 months, and the other a girl 4 years and a half old, daughter of the mother by her first husband. After committing the deed he immediately went to the police station and gave himself up, saying to the officer in charge that he had murdered his wife, not knowing that she had escaped. The poor woman is quite delirious with grief, crying most piteously for her children. She was removed to the hospital this morning. Fields was perfectly sober at the time of the murder, but had been drinking heavily since pay day up to last night. A quarrel arose between the pair about six dollars, which the wife had been keeping for him, and it appears that when he asked her for it she refused to give it up, which resulted in the murder.

The most intense excitement has prevailed all day over the fearful tragedy of this morning. Crowds of men, women and children have been moving to and fro between the house in which the crime was committed and the station-house, where the bodies of the murdered children lay, and where the murderer is confined awaiting the inquest. When the sad news first became known, the hue and cry went forth "Lynch him, lynch him!" and one man appeared on the scene with a rope; and, had the murderer not been taken into the cells and locked up, there is no saying how far the excited onlookers would have gone. The sight of the poor innocent little children lying with their throats cut from ear to ear, and the frantic grief of their mother, who fortunately did not receive as much injury as was at first supposed, was sufficient to move the hardest heart to sorrow.

The further particulars which have come to light during the day make the tragedy of this morning one of the most [illegible] many years been chronicled in Canada. The place which the murderer and his family occupied is in the rear of a row of houses on James street, near the Great Western Railway bridge. It goes by the name of Malloy's yard. The building is a small two-story one, and is divided into two tenements, so that each family has one room down stairs. In one of these tenements Thomas Fields and his family of four persons lived. The upstairs part of the house was used as a bedroom. In this the fearful deed was committed. The wonder is that the family occupying the other part of the house did not interfere, the partition being so thin that they, without doubt, must have heard what was going on. The only way of accounting for it is that they were petrified with fear. The murderer Thomas Fields, is about five feet five inches in height, rather thick set. He is in his 45th year. His general appearance is against him. His countenance is of a cast which gives one the impression of dogged determination. He was employed in the engine house of the great Western Railway to clean engines. He is known in the neighborhood in which he lived as a man addicted to drink, and one that would spend all his earnings in liquor; and although he received good laborer's pay, it is known that he has not contributed toward the support of his family for months past, with one exception, and that was about a month past, when he was induced to join a temperance society, and up to last Saturday he had kept from the intoxicating bowl, but on Monday, last he received his pay and commenced drinking again. He gave his wife $10 on Monday, and on Tuesday he got $5 of it back again. The wife states that she was a dressmaker in Cornwall, England, a few years ago. She was a widow with one child, a little girl, named Kate, one of the murdered ones, when she met Fields, who was a widower with four children, who are all now grown up. They married about two years ago, and emigrated to Canada. After remaining a short time in Montreal they came to this city, where the youngest of the murdered children was born. Yesterday Fields had been out drinking; he, however, returned in the afternoon quite sober. He asked his wife for some money, which she refused to give him. He became very much enraged, and loud and taunting language was indulged in on both sides. She was engaged cleaning a small cooking-stove at the time of the quarrel, and he remarked that she needn't mind cleaning it, for she would drink no more tea off it. She says that this is not the first time he has threatened her. It is only a few weeks since he made a murderous attack upon her, for which he was sent to gaol, and that on this account no particular attention was paid to his threat, so the family retired to rest as usual. After the quarrel he went out and did not return until about 9 o'clock, when he lighted a lamp and smoked for some time, after which he fell asleep, and for all she knows rested quietly until this morning. She says that on going to bed he was quite sober, because he undressed himself and did not stumble when coming up the stairs; for had he been drunk he would have been as helpless as a child. This morning, while they were asleep, the family all being in one bed, Mrs. Fields says she was aroused by hearing her husband ask a person out in the yard what time it was. In reply the person said it was twenty minutes to six. With this Fields, who must have slipped out of bed before asking the time, came over to where his wife was partly asleep, and struck her a fearful blow over the head with a sharp hatchet. Before she could rise he had struck her again, and had she not sprung up and grasped the hatchet, there is no doubt but that he would have finished her career; as it was he struggled hard to carry out his fiendish purpose, but his wife being a strong woman was too much for him, even after she had received two deep cuts. Upon getting free she ran out, shouting murder and crying for help. She went to a doctor who lives close by, and then had the flow of blood from the cuts stopped. She says that she met two men in the yard, whom she told to go up and save the children, but they seemed frightened and went away. The would-be murderer, after the escape of his victim and also the loss of his weapon, which she carried with her, must have gone in to the children and deliberately cut their throats. It would appear from the position in which they were found that the oldest was the first killed, and from the appearance of the cuts they must have been done with a razor. After he had completed his horrible work, he coolly dressed himself in the room where the two children were weltering in their life's blood, and then walked down stairs and went over towards the police station, apparently as composed as any man could be. Notice had, however, in the meantime been sent to a policeman, who, appearing on the scene, made him a prisoner. In the meantime it was not known to the crowd which had collected that he had murdered the children. The mother's return to the house soon made known the state of affairs, when the greatest excitement prevailed. Luckily the prisoner had been conveyed to the cells, or he would have been torn in pieces.

This afternoon at three o'clock a Coroner's jury was empannelled, and evidence corroborating what has already been stated was given, and also to the effect that he was always a cross and ugly dispositioned man. It was further shown that he must have taken the hatchet up with him the night before, as it was always kept down stairs. A razor was found by the police this afternoon, wrapped up in paper and put away in a box. About seven o'clock this evening the jury gave a verdict to the effect that the two children came to their death from the cutting of their throats by their father, Thomas Fields; who is sent up by the Coroner for deliberate and premeditated murder. While he was being removed from the station house to the jail, hundreds of people collected to see him. The witnesses were bound over to appear in September, when he will be tried.
