The third relic consisted of letters from a mother and sister, to a Lieutenant in the German Army, who was son and brother to the letter writers; several photographs of the officer's sisters and self, and a war-bond to the value of a hundred marks, etc. These things had been taken from the body of the officer by a Canadian stretcher-bearer, who had brought him out of the danger zone, after he was wounded, at the battle of Cambrai. It took several months, and many letters from Trinity, to find this mother and sister, as some of the letters were signed "mother," and others by the pet name of the sister, thus giving no definite name for address.

A letter, however, addressed to "the mother of the late Lieut. ——— of the ——— Regiment, etc., Berlin," found its way to the mother and sister. This mother and sister are highly educated people; but the letter received in reply to inquiry, though written in a different style, was in substance the same as that of the Prussian peasant—a mother's letter,—full of glad surprise, deep gratitude, and sincere affection. She knew that her son was killed at Cambrai, but how, or just when, he was killed; or where, or how he was buried three years before, she had never heard; and of course, had never expected to hear, after so long a time.

And then came a letter from far-away Newefoundland, a place she had never heard of before; a letter from one who (upon receipt of her definite address) was prepared to give her all the particulars she had so often wished for, hoped for, prayed for. Only a mother with the same experience of this German mother can understand her feelings, or measure the depth of the gratitude that she has since poured forth in her letters, to the friend in Trinity, Newfoundland; who by his letters to her, gave her those particulars about her son's moments, and sent her the letters, photos, etc., found on his body. The writer of those letters from Trinity, is by no means a pro-German; but he is in every respect a pro-mother, and, "Verily . . . . he hath his reward."

Mrs. Morell, who has been ill, is, we are glad to learn, getting better. Her niece, Mrs. Chas. Duder (better known to us as Clara Blandford) came from St. John's as her nurse. Probably this is one reason why Mrs. Morell is getting better.

The body of Mrs. Collis, whom God called to rest in Harbor Grace, on January 10th, was brought to Trinity for burial; and was placed in the Lockyer family lot, between the body of her husband, and that of her child, Feodore, till the resurrection morning. R.I.P. Mrs. Collis was Frances Mary Lockyer, a daughter of George and Mary Lockyer. She was born in Trinity sixty-six years ago; and was married to Edwin Collis on July 30th, 1872, by Rev. Benjamin Smith, in the presence of George Lockyer, Mary Ann Bayly, Arthur Collis, Emma J. Jenkins, W. J. Lockyer and Sarah J. Granger. Her three children were Athelstan, Alethia and Feodore. Alethia married Mr. W. Ford, of Heart's Content, and died there three years ago; Feodore died in Trinity, and Athelstan is living in Harbor Grace. Mrs. Darius Blandford, of Port Blandford, is sister, and Rev. Canon Lockyer is a brother.

One of the guests at Garland Hotel last week was Private William Quinton, of Princeton, B.B. He enlisted in the Royal Nfld. Regt. in 1916: was trained for service in St. John's and England; and six months after leaving England he took part in the fighting at Monchy, where he was wounded and then taken prisoner by the Germans. After six months in German hospitals, he worked in the coal mines at 16 cents a day, and was there when the armistice was signed. He then returned to England via Holland, and back to Newfoundland.

The people of Trinity are all very sorry to learn that the rumor re Dr. Barlow's intention to leave Trinity is correct. He has given notice that he will leave on May 1st, and we understand that he has accepted the practice of Channel and Port aux Basques. At a public meeting on Wednesday evening last, a committee was appointed to endeavor to secure a successor to Dr. Barlow. Trinity has had many reasons to be proud of its professional men of the last hundred years, but of none more so than those it has been privileged to claim as its medical men, whose names to-day are household words in Trinity Bight.

The doctor whose name goes down in the history of Trinity—as Doctor Barlow's will—associated with the names of Skelton, Johnson, Sr., Gill and White, may consider himself honored, and as a medical man, he could wish for no higher compliment. Dr. Johnson, Jr., and Dr. Barlow were more or less handicapped when they began work in Trinity, as they had to assume the role of reformers—to break down much that was out of date and old-fashioned in methods, and to introduce the better methods of the present day. The old methods were all right in the old days, but those days have passed away for ever, and the way is now clear for the next man to begin work by fairly up-to-date methods.

Trinity—in common with other places—has changed in some respects, not for the better; but there are several features about Trinity that are exclusively its own; these never change, and they have only to be personally known to be appreciated. Financially, the practice is worth twice as much as it was a few years ago, and if the doctor who succeeds to this, proves himself a worthy successor of those who have gone before him, he will, I believe, realize, as others have done, the existence of other things in Trinity which cannot be valued by dollars and cents, but which will help in the enjoyment of life.

Rev. Dr. Dunn, of Catalina, and Rev. Mr. Lench, of Bonavista, were in town on Monday last, and conducted a missionary service in the Methodist Church in the evening.

Thomas Northover, of Robin Hood, who made the harp, was also a fine punt builder. He had built one for a neighbor (who hailed from Limerick) and it was worn out in the service. The neighbor went to Thomas to get another punt built, and he said, "Thomas, I want you to build me another punt." "Yes," said Thomas, "but what size is she to be?" "Well," the neighbor said, "I want her to be the same depth, the same length and the same breadth: in short, Thomas, I want her to be the same size every way, as the old one; but, Thomas, I want her to carry more caplin." How did he do it?

Miss Rachel Fowlow, who has been doing temporary duty in the telegraph office in Catalina, came back to Trinity on Monday last, and has resumed her duties in the office here.

Mr. M. Smith, the Principal of the school here, went to St. John's by the last Prospero, to have an operation performed for nasal trouble. He returned by train on Monday evening.

The wood roads are now in good condition, and the daily procession of horses with loads of wood such as can be found only around the shores of Trinity Pond, will relieve the fuel tension.

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir,—In the Family Herald and Weekly Star of January 5, under the heading, "Soldiers at Rest"—David—there was a short but interesting account of his life. In tonight's issue of the Telegram it is re-printed. Both papers state that he was born in 1055 B.C., which I think is wrong. Certainly the Telegram is wrong in stating that he died in 1115 B.C. As the story of "The Shepherd King" has always been a favorite one with me, I could not bring the words of the sacred writer, "The time he reigned over Israel was forty years." "And he died in a good old age, full of days," to agree with the dates given in the F. H. and W.S. when I read them. So, taking my reference Bible I there read that when King Saul disobeyed God's command in 1063 B.C., the prophet Samuel was sent to Bethlehem and there anointed David to be the future King of Israel. But David did not begin to reign until after the death of Saul in 1056 B.C. After he had reigned 40 years he died in 1015 B.C., as stated in 1 Kings, Chap. 2, and 1 Chronicles, Chap. xxix. which is also the date given in the F. H. and W. S. Therefore, judging David to be about 21 (twenty-one) at the time Samuel anointed him the date of his birth would be about 1084 B.C. and at his death in 1015 B.C. about 70 years old.

I may here say, that only a short time ago, Rev. Dr. Jones, of St. Thomas's Parish, preached a very fine sermon on the subject of the three men who forced their way through the Philistine army to procure water in response to King David's appeal. "Oh that one would give me a drink of the water of the Well of Bethlehem which is by the gate."

Wedding Bells.

KEOUGH—WILLIAMS.

Thursday morning, at 11 o'clock, Miss Anna Maria Keough, daughter of Mr. G. J. Keough, of this city, and Mr. D. Williams, Bay Bulls, were united in matrimony. The ceremony took place at the Oratory, Right Rev. Monsignor McDermott, V.G., officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, was beautifully gowned in Duchesse satin with Georgette overdress with pearl trimmings and wore a Pekin blue velvet hat trimmed with gold lace, and white fox furs. Her bridal bouquet was white carnations and maidenhair ferns. She was attended by her sister, Miss Chrissie Keough who was attired in pink satin, and carried a bouquet of pink carnations and ferns. The groom's two little nieces, Hilda and Kathleen Thompson, acted as flower girls. The groom was supported by Mr. Frank Mahoney, and Master Gerard Martin. After the ceremony the bridal party drove to "The Rock" the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Martin, Freshwater Road, where luncheon was partaken of and the health of the bride and groom duly honored, and by the 1 p.m. express, Mr. and Mrs. Williams left for Holyrood where the honeymoon will be spent. The bride, who for many years was stenographer in the Canadian Commissioner's Office, was the recipient of many valuable presents and received several congratulatory telegrams from abroad. With numerous friends the Telegram joins in wishing the happy couple many years of wedded bliss.
