NOTICE.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Traders, Manufacturers and owners of Weights, Measures and Weighing Machines generally are specially requested to read carefully the following instructions and act accordingly:

1. The Weights and Measures Act provides for a regular biennial inspection of all Weights and Measures used for trade purposes, as well as for irregular inspections of the same, which may be made at any time when deemed necessary by the inspector, and it also imposes a heavy penalty on any trader or other person who wilfully obstructs or impedes an inspector or assistant inspector in the performance of his duty under said Act, or who refuses to produce the whole of his weights and measures for inspection when called upon to do so by an inspecting officer.

2. Every trader, manufacturer and owner of weights, measures, and weighing machines when paying moneys to Inspectors or Assistant Inspectors of Weights and Measures for verification fees, is entitled to, and is specially requested to demand from the officer who makes the inspection, an official certificate ("Form O, 6" with the words "Original for the Trader" printed at the head thereof) properly filled out and stamped, and also at the same time to carefully ascertain whether or not the stamps attached to such certificate represent exactly the value the amount of cash paid. Traders are requested to bear in mind that certificates of verification are of no value whatever unless stamps covering the full amount of fees charged are attached.

3. Owners and holders of these official certificates are specially requested to keep them carefully for two years, and in order to secure their safe keeping it would be advisable to placard them in their places of business in the manner in which ordinary license certificates are done, for it must be distinctly understood that all traders who are unable to produce their properly stamped certificates, when asked to do so by an inspector or assistant inspector, may, in all probability, have to pay over again their verification fees.

WHAT GOLD CANNOT BUY.

BY MRS. ALEXANDER,

Author of "The Wooing O't," "Her Dearest Foe," "Which Shall it be?" etc.

Continued.

They paced somewhat slowly across the grounds to a wooded rising ground on the left of the house, from which a view of it and its surroundings could be obtained, and when they had accomplished the ascent Mrs. Saville sat down, as if tired, on a seat placed at the best point of outlook. Her companion had observed that the keen active woman was stronger in spirit than in flesh, and felt a sort of pity for this rich, prosperous, desolate lady.

"What a sweet, beautiful place this is!" she exclaimed, after gazing at the scene before her for a few minutes. "I think it is the most charming I have ever seen."

"Then you have not seen much," returned Mrs. Saville, testily.

"That is true. I have not seen any fine places in England, and the palaces and chateaux abroad are so melancholy; but who could desire anything beyond the exquisite, graceful, home-like beauty of Inglefield?"

It was, in truth, a delightful abode, sheltered on the east by the upland from which they now looked down; the ground sloped steeply from the opposite side, giving a wide view over a richly-wooded country; while the house, gardens and grounds occupied the level space between. Fine trees stood about, for Inglefield was an old country-house dating tolerably far back, built in the half-timbered style, the first story of fine bricks, the upper part beams and plaster, with high chimneys and many-gabled roofs. The large additions made by Mrs. Saville's father had been carried out in strict accordance with the original plan, and the garden designed to suit it also. A circular lawn, surrounded with flowering shrubs and dotted with several large spreading trees, separated the house from a wide avenue which opened exactly opposite the entrance overarched by a double row of great old elms at either side. Beyond, on the left from a wooded hollow, through which a trout-stream had been widened and dammed into a miniature lake, glimpses of which could be caught when the sunlight fell upon it, rose the smoke of some unseen chimney.

"Home-like," repeated Mrs. Saville. "There is an immense amount of nonsense talked about home. I wish you could see Kingswood, Lord Everton's place; it is one of the finest seats in England,—full of family treasures and historic relics,—and he would not make the faintest effort to retain it. He might have entered diplomacy, or taken a foreign appointment and saved money. But he is quite content to derive his income from the rent a Manchester millionaire pays him for his ancestral halls, when he might have married the millionaire's daughter and kept it for himself."

"Well, if the daughter was not the sort of woman he could love, he was right," said Miss Desmond thoughtfully. "Suppose she was not companionable, that he could not love her; the finest place in the world could [not make up for that."

"You are a foolish child! The thing called love soon evaporates. Rank, importance, high position, last, and duties due to one's station fill up life satisfactorily. It is a low, mean conception of existence to spend it in personal pleasure."

"Yes, certainly. You are right," eagerly. "To live for one's self alone, in any way, is miserable. But one has a right to try and be happy if it does not interfere with the happiness of others."

"You have been tolerably poor, from what you say," said Mrs. Saville, not unkindly. "Have you been happy?"

Her interlocutor paused before she replied, "Yes, on the whole I have been happy. Sometimes it has been trying to feel shabby and to be unable to get a new dress, to know that lovely pictures and delightful music were within your reach, yet inaccessible for want of a few francs; still, when I could have the dress, or see the pictures, or hear the opera, it was heavenly. The worst is to want nice delicate things for some one you love and not be able to get them; that is bitter. Still, nothing can be so poverty-stricken as to have no one to trouble about, no one to love or live for, no one to love you."

"It is, then, very unfortunate for a person of your disposition to have lost your home," remarked Mrs Saville, coldly.

"It is sad enough; but I have been fortunate in finding friends like Mr. Rawson and his daughter. It is better, too, to believe that there is some pleasant shelter need rook round the next turn of the road than always to look for sandy deserts. Loneliness is the worst evil of all; it is what I fear most."

Mrs. Saville did not answer immediately; then she said, abruptly, "What is your name,—your Christian name?"

"My name? Hope Desmond."

"I thought so. It is very appropriate. You have given me a curious mental picture. I suppose it is true, though it is incomprehensible to me, but you give me the idea of being sensible and accurate. Do you not feel that your life has been lost, fruitless, passed as it has been in this constant struggle?"

"No," replied Hope, her dark eyes lighting, and lifting her head with an unconscious but dignified movement. "It has had much sweetness, and I have been of some use. Though I am not clever, I have done what I could; and that will always comfort me. I do not fear the future. Work will come to me. I would not change with any one. I prefer to remain the 'me' that I am."

"You are an unusual specimen, Miss Desmond, and really a profound philosopher; yet you have refinement and taste, ay, and culture enough, to enable you to enjoy beauty and elegance, literature and art. I congratulate you; only, if every one was as easily pleased the world would stand still."

"Perhaps so," said Hope Desmond, with a sigh. "I can only see life according to my lights."

Then, after some minutes' silence, she observed how prettily the smoke curled up from among the trees down in the hollow.

"Yes, said Mrs. Saville, "I suppose Lord Dacre has arrived. Inglefield Court belongs to him. It is an older and much damper place than this. I must call to-morrow." She heaved a deep sigh as she spoke.

"Miss Dacre is one of the fortunate ones according to my estimate. She is her father's sole heiress, and takes the title too when she succeeds him. She is rather pretty, rather accomplished, and decidedly popular. I used to see a good deal of her at one time; now——" She paused and frowned, then, rising, she said, peremptorily, "Come, I feel rheumatic; I have sat here too long. Where is Prince? Call him, please; he gets lost in the underwood when he tries to hunt about as if he were a big dog."

Hope dived among the bushes and recovered the little truant, bringing him back in her arms, the creature making violent efforts to lick her face all the way.

Few words passed between the companions till almost at the gate which opened from Mrs. Saville's grounds on a foot-path which crossed the vicarage fields, when that lady said, suddenly,—

"I expect my son to-morrow."

"Your eldest son?"

"I have but one son," returned Mrs. Saville, icily; then after a moment's pause she exclaimed, "Do take Prince up and give him to me: there is a cow at the end of the field, and the little spitfire is sure to attack it!"

CHAPTER V.

Richard Saville was not a favorite with his mother, though he had never given her the least trouble. He was a tall, slight young man, but there was no dignity in his height, for it was neutralized by a stoop conveying the impression that he had not strength enough to hold himself upright. He had dark hair, rather thin about the temples, and well-shaped brown but evidently short-sighted eyes; his manners were cold, though gentle, and he gave a general impression of languid circulation and extreme correctness. He had inherited something of the Saville indifference to everything save his own peculiar tastes or fancies, and a good deal of his uncle Everton's obtuseness as regarded personal distinction. His keen-sighted mother soon perceived that her first-born would never fulfil her ambitious aspirations, and this contributed to her strong preference for her younger son, on whose career she had built her hopes, though his choice of a profession had greatly annoyed her. Hugh had inherited all the plebian energy which made his maternal grandfather a wealthy and useful member of the community, and he cared little for any personal distinction not earned by himself. Nature intended him for a radical, and the accidents of birth and early association gave him certain aristocratic leanings,—which conjunction of centripetal and of centrifugal attraction made him a tolerably round-minded man.

He and his brother were excellent friends, in spite of the low estimate each had of the other's tastes.

The arrival of Richard (no one ever dreamed of calling him Dick) was, on the whole, an agreeable change in the routine of life at Inglefield. He soon discovered that Hope Desmond was a sympathetic listener; he therefore confided to her the great scheme he had conceived of compiling a book to contain all the English phrases and proverbs that were distinctly derived from the Anglo-Saxon, and he soon grew sufficiently familiar to ask if Miss Desmond would be so good as to assist him in his work, whenever his mother could spare her.

"I will do so with pleasure, Mr. Saville," she returned, in her frank, fearless way. "But you must ask your mother's permission, and before me. She is a person not to be trifled with."

Making a Man Crawfish.

When five or six men get together and begin to tell stories there is always more or less lying done, especially if they are only casual acquaintances. Going down on the boat from Natchez there were three or four "rings" which hung together, and each of us told some pretty tall stories. There was a man from Syracuse who laid himself out for a whopper, and when the rest of us were through he settled back and said:

"Gentlemen, the ship which was carrying me to India was burned off the island of Borneo, and I got away in a boat with a single sailor."

"When was this?" asked a native Mississippian, who was taking a lot of mules down the river.

"In 1858."

"Exactly—go ahead."

"We had neither water nor provisions in the boat," said the man, "and after drifting for three days I wanted to draw lots to see who should die. The sailor refused."

"His name?" asked the Mississippian.

"Foster, I believe."

"You are right; go ahead."

"I suffered one day more, and then as he slept, I killed him with my knife and drank his blood. It saved my life. Next day I was picked up by a ship."

"And you killed the man, did you?"

"I did".

"And drank his blood?"

"Yes"

"Well, you are the man I've been looking for those many years. That sailor was my brother—my big brother—the only brother I ever had!"

"No!

"Yes he was. Some of those who got away in another boat saw him go off with you and told me of it. Stranger, the man who drinks my brother's blood has got to die!"

But you must be mistaken. I—I hardly think his name was Foster.

"Oh, yes it was. Name was Foster—ship got afire—off the island of Borneo—drifted about in a boat. It's all straight and now I want satisfaction. Have you got a bowie knife about you?"

"Look here, boys," said the Syracuse man as he caught his breath. "I'm in a box and got to make a confession. I was lying about that adventure from start to finish."

"Sure of it?" demanded the Mississippian while everybody else laughed.

"I know I was."

"Didn't kill my brother and drink his blood?"

"Certainly not."

"Well, then that's all right. I'm glad to hear it. I'm as humble as a lamb on ordinary matters, but when it comes to killing my brother—the only brother I ever had—why who wouldn't fight?"

We asked the Syracuse man to give us something else, but he wouldn't do it. He went off to his stateroom and tied his head up with a towel.

Baron E. de Rothschild, of Paris, is at Welcker's with his courier, J. Wolavojel. He is the only son of Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, head of the Parisian branch of the great bankers. He is tall, blond, fine looking and about twenty-three years of age. Having finished his university course he is spending a few years in travel. For the past five months he has been seeing America and will next week sail for Europe.

Fashion is going back to the plain, straight pull-back skirt with a fringed ruche or knife plaiting round the bottom.

A Hard Corner.

The age of 30 is a hard corner for a women to turn, and 35 is still harder. She feels that she is fast leaving her youth behind her. But there is no reason why a woman should be faded and passe at 35, or even 45. The chief cause of the early fading of American women is found in the fact that many of them suffer from some form of female weakness or disease which robs the face of its bloom, draws dark circles about the eyes, brings early wrinkles and sallowness, and stamps the face and figure with signs of ill-health. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will cure all these troubles, will bring back the lost bloom, and remove the pains and ailments which make women grow old before their time. Guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or price ($1.00) refunded.

On Thursday last Mr. Wallace Fraser, of Clementsvale, while working in his mill heard a splash in a large hole filled with water near the mill. JAMAICA EXHIBITION, 1890.

AN EXHIBITION will be held in Kingston, Jamaica, in January, 1891, of Island products, manufactures and works of art, together with exhibits of works of art, machinery and industrial and agricultural products from Great Britain, other countries and colonies.

In view of the geographical relation of the Island of Jamaica with the ports of Canada and the nature and extent of the imports of Jamaica, as well as the product of the Island, the Government of Canada accepted an invitation of the Government of Jamaica to participate in such exhibition, with a view of obtaining an extension of markets for the products and manufactures of Canada.

The Canadian Government will undertake to pay freight of all approved exhibits.

Entries must be made not later than September 30th next; and the latest date at which exhibits can be sent forward from Halifax, N. S., or St. John, N. B., is the middle of December.

Mr. A. Leon Brown, M. P., has been appointed Honorary Commissioner to represent Canada at the exhibition.

Forms of application and general information can be obtained on application to the Honorary Commissioner. Address Department of Agriculture, Ottawa; or to the undersigned.

By order of the Minister of Agriculture.
H. B. SMALL,
Secretary Dept. of Agriculture.

OATS! OATS!
I HAVE added to my stock of Oats 5 carloads purchased by my traveller while on P. E. Island this week. These Oats having been purchased at a considerable concession from ruling prices, I am able to offer them at bottom figures. I have at all times a large stock of oats on hand and constantly arriving and can name the most favorable prices to buyers of carloads.
GARDENIA.
300 bbls. of the above superior Oil in stock. Buyers must recognize the value to them indirectly, if not directly, of patronizing a local house in preference to any other. If we as a people depended upon the trade and patronage of those in other countries for our profit and support we would probably soon grow poor, hence it must be plain to all that by patronizing local houses we benefit ourselves. Gardenia is the only brand of oil sold whose benefits are wholly local.
