A HARROWING DISASTER.

THE SCHOONER PUBNICO BELLE WRECKED LAST THURSDAY.

On the Newfoundland Coast—Two Women and Five Children Among the Lost—Thrilling Story of the Wreck.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 19.—Particulars were received by mail today of a harrowing disaster on the Newfoundland coast, the schooner Pubnico Belle being wrecked and two women and five children lost.

Captain Samuel Butts of the lost vessel states that the Pubnico Belle, with a crew of four, left Catalina on the morning of Wednesday, the 8th inst., bound for St. Johns with a cargo of lumber. She had also on board five women and five children as passengers. She made Raccalieu about 8 o'clock Wednesday night. The weather was fine. The wind then veered to south southwest and afterwards there came on a storm of wind and rain from 11.30 o'clock Wednesday night until daylight Thursday morning. The vessel lost her mainsail and foresail successively and ran ashore on the cliff at 2.30 o'clock on Thursday morning. The crew let go the anchor, which checked the vessel, but the chain parted from the violence of the storm. William Rose jumped ashore, and the captain threw a line to him. By this means the rest of the crew got ashore, and the following passengers were saved: Mrs. Rachel Burton, Miss Julia Burton and Miss Wells. Mrs. Freeman and Miss Carolina Higgins were drowned, and five children were also lost, one being Mrs. Freeman's infant, another child coming on to St John's, and the remaining three belonging to Mrs. Rachel Burton, a boy of 2 years old, a boy of 9 and a girl of 5 years.

Miss Sadie Wells states that she boarded the schooner at Catalina. The weather was fine and continued so until night, then it blew hard. At two o'clock Thursday morning the schooner struck. "At this time all the passengers were in the cabin. Besides myself, there were Mrs. Burton, Julia and three children, Mrs. Freeman and her infant, Miss Carolina Higgins and a girl named Alice Hicks. I was sitting on the locker and Miss Higgins was lying on part of it. All the others, children included, were in the berths. The vessel struck three times before we started. Of the crew an old man, came down for a rope. We asked him if there was any chance to be saved. He said: Yes, dont' say anything, it will be all right." The water was then coming through the cabin floor The water was soon up to the lockers and we were wet. All the children were taken out of their berths and got ready to start for the deck. We were close into land, but a heavy sea was breaking over the rocks. When we reached the deck two of the crew were ashore, having taken off their boots and jumped on to the [illegible] round his waist, and one of them took the end with him. He then jumped and got ashore. The captain was the only man then left on board. We all went over to the side where he was. He tied a rope around Miss Burton and she was landed safely. While in the act of placing a rope around Mrs. Burton, a heavy sea came and washed all off the deck. I caught hold of the rope which was in the captain's hand, and was hauled ashore with him, while a wave washed Mrs. Burton upon the rock. But I never saw Mrs. Freeman or Miss Higgins after.

"Mrs. Freeman would in all probability have been saved if she had abandoned her children, but the mother's love was too strong. When we got ashore we had to climb the face of the cliff some distance to be out of reach of the vessels spars. The captain and three men then went away, as they said, in search of assistance, leaving the passengers and one of the crew named William Ross clinging to the cliff. We remained there till nearly chilled to death, when, with the assistance of Ross, we managed to climb to the top of the cliff and commence our march over the island. Mrs. Burton, who was very weak, was assisted by Ross. After travelling a long distance over rocks and through woods, marshes and water, we met several men going towards the wreck and one of them at once turned back and brought us to his house. Here we found the captain but did not see the two men who started with him. The people of the house treated us very kindly. Had we been made aware of our danger in time I believe we could all have been saved. After we got ashore two little boys could be heard calling for help. A rope was repeatedly thrown to them, but each time it fell short. Finally the little fellows were washed off and their voices were stilled in the sea."

Miss Julia Burton, one of the survivors, says she could see her brother Malcolm clinging to the rigging and here him calling for help. He was there a long time, but at last the sea came and washed him off.

Mrs. Freeman, one of the lost, was the wife of William Freeman, now in Victoria, B. C. She left two children in Catalina. Mrs. Burton and her whole family were coming for the purpose of taking passage by the Steamship Portia for New York, where her husband is. She had but one child left her. The only thing saved was a small trunk of clothes which was washed ashore.

Captain Buck stated that he stuck to the wreck as long as there was anyone to be saved. The first man to jump was William Rose. He was followed by James Penny and Sol Evans. The first person who got off was Miss Burton. After putting a rope around her waist he saw her safely conveyed on shore. He then tried to put a rope around her mother's waist, but while doing so the sea washed her out of his hands. She had a 5-year-old child in her arms at the time, but it was washed away from her. The captain got pinned by spars and a sea took Mrs. Freeman and infant overboard. When he recovered he found Miss Wells and was in the act of fastening a rope about her when another sea came and washed her away. The next place he found himself was on the rocks. He says that if he had had another man with him all might have been saved. He further said that the crew looked after themselves and jumped ashore at the first chance.

DISHONORING THE DEAD.

UNSEEMLY SIGHTS IN THE OLD BURIAL GROUND.

Let the Dead be Reinterred and let the Young Monument be Erected Elsewhere.

In a little graveyard on the Avon an unpretentious slab of marble bears this inscription:—

Good friend, for Jesus' sake forbear
To dig the dust enclosed here;
Blest be the man that spares these stones,
And curst be he that moves my bones.

Though the dust over which this inscription was raised more than two hundred years ago, was once the dwelling of a mind which the world honors more and more as it approaches by slow degrees the plane which Shakespeare occupied. No one for a moment has thought of disobeying his injunction though feeling, as all the world has felt, that Westminister Abbey itself, were but a poor monument, even though the structure marked but his single grave. That his poor frame "after life's fitful fever" should be permitted to rest in peace, was no less his desire that it is of all who live. The sentiment may be a weak one, but that it is an intense one and one that is common to high and low alike is proved by the epitaph of Shakespeare which, very likely, was written by himself, and it has generally been respected the world over. With what feelings, then, do the people who pass through the Old Burial Ground from day to day regard the ghoulish work that is in progress a little way to the right from the Sydney street entrance and close by the flag staff? Have those poor men and women, the fathers and mothers of the city, who were laid away there "to their last sleep, with many tears," almost 100 years ago, no descendants to save their graves from desecration? If not, there are those who will wonder why the Historical Society or the Society of the Loyalists do not come forward and apply for an injunction that the outrage may proceed no further. The excavation that is being made for the Young memorial monument is about 15 feet square and has reached a depth of about five feet. It is constantly surrounded by a group of idlers, and as the workmen from time to time unearth a fragment of a coffin, a skull, or some other portion of the human anatomy, a ripple of excitement is observable. In the neighborhood of a dozen graves have been opened, and fragments of coffins and human bones are to be seen almost anywhere one cares to turn his eyes. This morning the workmen were quite jocular. As all that remains of some poor mortal to whom the sunlight and human sympathy were quite as dear as they are to any of us, were being hoisted up spadeful after spadeful, the employes of the city saluted them in a manner like this:—

"Hi, Johnny, 'an' ye're here yet; an' fwhat does ye's think of St. John as it is, and how does ye's like a breath of the fa[illegible] [illegible] ened skull.

"Send him out here; I want to talk with him," shouted a boy standing in the circle about the excavation and out went the skull, the hollows once occupied by eyes that flashed with indignation or melted with sympathy, many years ago, to be stared at by eyes that in a little time will be dissolved and be no more than they. By a scene like this Hamlet meditated:—

"Here hung those lips that I have kissed, I know not how oft. Where be your jibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of wit that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one now, to mock your own jeering? Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour she must come."

The fact that without disturbing the graves in the Old Burying Ground the Young memorial monument could not be placed there, should have been a sufficient reason for planting it elsewhere, even if no other reason had existed. But there were other reasons. It was thought that in the Rural Cemetery one of its objects would have failed of accomplishment because that place is visited by a comparative few; but King square is visited by as many or more than the Old Burying Ground, and the spot that used to be occupied by the band stand should have been selected for its erection.

It is hoped that the dishonored remains that have been dug up in the Old Burial Ground will be at once carefully gathered up and reinterred in the place they formerly occupied, and that a suitable site for the Young monument will be found in King or Queen square, or the Rural cemetery. It matters little which is chosen.

ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOPS.

The Pope in Agreement With President Harrison.

BY TELEGRAPH TO THE GAZETTE.

ROME, July 21.—President Harrison's view on the matters advocated by Herr Cahensly and the St. Raphael societies as outlined to Cardinal Gibbons have produced an excellent impression upon the Pope, who declared that he has never favored the plan of appointing bishops of the nationalities of the Roman Catholic communities in the United States. The incident it is added, is thus closed.

A SUICIDE FORMERLY OF ST. JOHN.—Word has reached here of the death by suicide of Mr. E. Peiler formerly a piano dealer of this city. During recent years he lived at Boston, and it is understood that for some time past he has been suffering from a cancer in the mouth.

THE SOWER ASHORE.—Messrs. Scammell Bros. received a telegram last evening from Capt. McLellan, of the schooner Sower, stating that his vessel was ashore near South West harbor, Mount Desert. Part of the keel was torn away, but the captain thought that he could get the vessel off all right with the assistance of a tug, if the weather kept calm. The tug Neptune was sent down to tow the schooner off to-day.

SLINGING MUD.—Many people have manifested great interest in the work of excavating for the Young memorial in the old burying ground. The corporation who were engaged in digging apparently object to this, and this morning they slung mud about in such a promiscuous manner, that several good citizens were splashed in a most annoying way. One of them visited the police station to get retribution, and the case may yet come before the court.

Police Court.

James McMinneman and Thos. Clark, were fined $8 and $4 respectively for abusive language.

Dennis Forrest and Wm. Reed, drunks, were fined $4 each.

Thos. James, 65, arrested, for stealing coal from the I. C. R. sheds was remanded. James—from all accounts is respectable though poor, and he says his wife was sick and he had no coal. He carried away a pailful.

Several more hop beer cases are being tried this afternoon.

Silvester Wright, colored, was before the magistrate to-day, charged by his wife with turning her out of doors and refusing to support her. The trouble all arose because Silvester took a young lady to the family secrets were freely disclosed in court. The case, however, was dismissed, amicable relations being once more entered into.

THE HARRIED MASHER.

Married Men Sometimes Think Themselves Irresistible Because they Once Fooled one Good Woman.

The temptation to flirt with women tackles about nine men out of ten and downs them. But it by no means follows that a man will flirt even after he has humiliated himself by consenting to do so. It really takes more nerve than is to be met with in every man. He will scan each woman he passes, view her swiftly over from top to toe, make a mental note as to her face and form, her dress and complexion, try to catch her eye, and feel quite puffed up if she favors him with a glance in passing. But he wouldn't know what to do if she smiled. He wouldn't have the countenance to meet a single advance on her part. It may be a surprising statement, but it is a true one.

The other evening a fellow was waiting for the suburban gates of the Northwestern depot to open says the Chicago Herald. He was a respectable married man from Irving park, but he had always prided himself on his eye for female beauty. He wouldn't have anything to do with really fast women, and always thought of them with a species of disgust. But here, at the side of the baggage-room door, was a demure little woman, pretty as a peach, and with a form fairly glorious. He had missed his regular train and would have nearly half an hour to wait. At another time he would have gone away and transacted some business in the mean time, but here was an opportunity not often to be met. He would "make a mash." He walked past her two or three times and convinced himself she was willing to pick up a flirtation. As he walked past her one time his heart gave a great thump, for he thought she came just to the point of speaking to him. Next time he came along he stopped a trifle behind her and said, low so that the baggageman couldn't hear:

"Evening, little one."

His head was in a whirl. He had insulted many a woman with his eyes, but here was the first time he had attempted to complete his outrage. She turned about slowly, met his eyes without a tremor and waited. He didn't know what to do. The muscles of his face refused to manufacture a smile. He was conscious of a twitching, an embarrassed look, a guilty blush. He struggled a moment under the cool challenge of that superb being, and then he started to turn away, for a group of men and women had come clattering and laughing down the iron stairs, and he recognized some Irving Park and Des Plaines people. But he had no time to escape.

The pretty girl caught him and held him, and nailed his shame upon him, and she did it without for an instant appearing anything other than the lady she must have been:

"Hereafter when you don't want anything, don't say anything. Married men sometimes think themselves irresistible because they once fooled one good woman."

The clattering, laughing group stopped at the foot of the iron stairway, caught the tableau, almost pitied him in the painful confusion, and then permitted him to escape from the depot. He waited for the last train home that night and never again attempted to pick up an acquaintance with a handsome woman.

White Wear
FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN.

IT IS A FACT NOW RECOGNIZED by large numbers of Ladies that White Cotton Undergarments can be purchased ready-made at prices actually less than the same can be made-up in their own homes, and thereby save all the worry and inconvenience in selecting the necessary materials to make up a trousseau. At the same time, while the prices are lower than ever, qualities, sewing and fit have not deteriorated in any degree, but, on the contrary, we are showing better garments for less money than ever before in the history of our White Wear Trade.

This has been caused by the wonderful improvements in the machinery used, and the rapidity with which large quantities can be produced by skilled help, better sewn and finished than can be done by ordinary hand labor.

While we keep an immense variety of styles and qualities in White Wear, we make a specialty of NIGHTDRESSES in three leading prices, the quality of which we can confidently say is not excelled in any city in America for value. They are
