Dale's dismissal. On the preceding day he had not been allowed to explain the matter as fully as he desired. His statement was as follows:

"Although the councils had nothing to do with the dismissal of Prof. Dale, it would be wholly incorrect to infer that I, as president, had nothing whatever to do with it. My attention was called in the first instance to Prof. Dale's letter by the Government, as I have said. In mentioning this I expected to be allowed to state the subsequent steps in the affair. Without going into details I may say that ultimately I expressed my opinion at length on the letter and submitted tonsiderations on which the Government, I have reason to believe, based their action."

The president's cross-examination by Mr. Riddell then proceeded. With reference to the testimonials as to the standing of Toronto students elsewhere in Greek, physics, etc., witness admitted that none existed to the departments of political economy and history. As te that none existed to the departments of political economy and history. As to suppression of hustling and its influence on the friction existing, witness said that no stronger measures had been taken in autumn last than in 1892. Still he thought that the affair had affected opinion. The residence trouble, he admitted, had been among the graduates; he had the impression there was some feeling against the council among the present undergraduates for having evicted the graduates from residence, but could offer only an impression.

The Objection to Jury.

President Loudon further admitted that the opposition of outside theological institutions constituted one objection to Mr. Jury, another was the fact that he was an active plitician. He had known politicians who did not always drag in party politics, namely, Prof. Mills, but he had been given to understand that Jury was a different kind of man from Prof. Mills.

He could not say what was the reason of this objection to Mr. Jury.

"Why was Thompson objectionable?"

"I presume that something was said against him."

"What?"

"I do not know. The name of Jury was always coupled with that of Thompson."

Certain members of the staff were not opposed to hearing the two men within university walls. Others had objected; among them Prof. Pike. He did not know what that gentleman's objection was Witness finally admitted that the witness finally admitted that the ultimate cause why the names were struck off the program before its submission to the council was the objectionableness of Messrs. Jury and Thompson. He saw Prof. Mavor strike the names out in his room before taking the program to the council. There was no discussion, Mavor stating that he had arranged the matter with students.

Mr. Riddell Withdraws.

After luncheon the commissioners retired to consider the disposition of the charges laid against Profs. Mayor and Vandersmissen and President Loudon. Mr. Riddell stated his intention of proceeding with no charges unless those against Prof. Mayor were considered. The commissioners, after half an hour's deliberation, decided that they could not hear the charges against Prof. Mayor, they being too vague, but since specific allegations had been made against President Loudon and Prof. Vandersmissen and the names of witnesses furnished they would proceed to hear them on Tuesday morning. The low price is one recommendation in favor of buying on all weak spots. The wheat in weak spots. The wheat in weak spots in four in stock is centered at Duulth, Minneapolis and Chicago, and all indications now are the milling demand will require the most of it. Canada appears bare of wheat, so bare that what is being held in Montreal for export is being need for milling in Western Ontario in the neighborhood of 70c to 75c per bushel. The demand on the advance is good. The excitement in wheat has absorbed all attention to the disadvantage of corn. Now the trade begins to realize the cause for higher-priced wheat is the consumption for cattle feed. Now that wheat is so much higher corn will be the cause for higher-priced wheat is the consumption of cattle feed.
