Ideal Employers.

CONTENTED EMPLOYEES IN CLARK'S THREAD WORKS IN NEW JERSEY AND SCOTLAND —A POLICY WHICH YIELDS AN INCOME OF A MILLION DOLLARS A YEAR.

NEWARK, N. J., September 2.—There is one great manufacturer in this country who never knows what labor troubles are. Strikes to him are mere matters of hearsay. He reads about them and hears his friends describe them, but personally they are unknown quantities in his busy existence. Strange to say this great manufacturer, whose wares are in nearly every household the world over, is an international manufacturer, and his experience here is matched by his experience abroad. His men have never struck on either side of the water. William Clark is the man referred to. He lives in Newark and his wealth is unbounded. He is the proprietor of the Clark O. N. T. thread works, employing here and in Paisley, Scotland, more hands than any establishment probably in the world. There are 5,000 hand in his immense establishment here, and it is supposed there are as many more at work, day in and day out, in the twin establishment in the land of Burns and Scott.

Mr. Clark really does not know how many men, women and children there are employed in the double thread works; but he knows that it is calculated his pay roll here and the pay roll at Paisley, feed 50,000 mouths each week. The checks drawn for wages each Saturday run away up into the thousands of dollars; and they furnish food, clothing and domestic happiness to people enough to make a large city. Yet in all these years, since the thread became famous, and the demand for it has grown enormous, the Clarks know nothing of labor disturbances. Boys grow to manhood and girls to womanhood, they marry and are given in marriage, found homes, rear families, grow old and die, all in the service of the Clarks, and content with what they get and with the benefits they reap.

This seems passing strange doesn't it? There is probably no parallel case in the world. But the explanation is simple enough, after all. William Clark makes his employes a study. He says there are two reasons why he does this. In the first place,

HE IS FOND OF HUMANITY.

He likes to do what good he can, although never posing as a philanthropist and detesting all affectation and ostentatious reform. He is never happier than when he passes, as he does nearly every day, up and down the big rooms of his factories on the Passaic and greets all the busy workers at looms and shuttles. Every case of sickness is reported to him and he sees personally that medicine and the proper nursing is forthcoming. His wife and daughters can be seen driving in their carriage to the door of one of the little homes of the employe in East Newark almost any day, and dispensing some delicacy and inquiring after the sick or injured. Vacations are granted when necessary and the pay goes on all the same.

This is the first reason Mr. Clark gives for his conduct. The second reason is that it pays. William Clark says kind and generous treatment of the employe is the very best of business strokes. If there were no humanity or philanthropy in his composition he would do the same, because strikes and disputes demoralize trade and distract the employes. These reasons are certainly sound in theory, and the Clarks, for the Scottish brother and partner adopts pretty much the same course, prove them to be sound in practice.

Not only does William Clark look after all his men when sick, but each year he takes all his employes and their families on an excursion. He gives them an entire day's outing. Saturday is the time fixed, and wages go on just the same. It is a holiday, and one that does not cost any of the hands a single cent. All the bills are footed by the proprietor. A week or so ago the excursion for this year took place. Over 5,000 hands were taken to Ocean Grove for the day. It required 72 cars to carry them, and the amount of sandwiches, coffee, lemonade and ice-cream consumed is beyond computation. Mr. Clark accompanied the party, and there was not a single fight or even the semblance of disorder of any sort.

The thread works in this country are situated on the banks of the Passaic river here. They occupy both sides of the stream, part of them being in Newark proper and part in East Newark. There are some dozen superintendents and several score of foremen. Back of the East Newark works are rows on rows of houses. These are the property of the employes, who have built and paid for them out of the substantial earnings they receive from week to week. Of course not all the employes own homes. The home is more characteristic of the Scotch employe than of any other kind. But there is scarcely any poverty among all those thousands of workmen and women, because extravagance and dissipation are rare. Dissapation is really the one and only cause for discharge. Incompetency is borne until it becomes capacity in the long run. So much for this and the method employed by the proprietor. Now let us conclude by glancing a moment at William Clark. In appearance he is the typical, shrewd Scotchman. But personally he is one of the most genial and approachable of men. He has a handsome home, but no finer than scores of Newarkers, whose wealth combined would be lost in the fortune Clark possesses. He likes sports, and especially those of an aquatic nature. This is evidenced by the fact that he is one of the originators and owners of the famous Thistle that is so soon to compete with our crack yachts for the international championship cup. He is as modest about the great yacht as he is about the great business and his great wealth. He believes, however, that it will carry the cup back to the land from which it originally came.

How much is William Clark worth? He doesn't know, and only guesses at it, like the average citizen. He frankly says that he cannot keep track of his income, and has not kept track of it for years. He only knows that it piles up in the shape of investments of various sorts here and in Great Britain, and that there is more than enough cold cash left over each New Year's to embarrass him as to how to spend or invest for it. His brother over in Paisley tells the same story. The nearest estimate to their wealth was made some months ago by the head book-keeper here. He computed, so it is said, that William Clark's annual income was $900,000. It probably comes close to a clear million each twelve month. Hark you, that is only the income. What the amassed fortune is has not been computed. But if it were known probably all these pleasant bits of gossip about the wealthiest men of the nation living in New York and about Wall street as the business centre of the richest man in America might prove simply passing pieces of fiction. It is not at all so sure that America's richest man does not reside here in Newark and transact his business in two enormous buildings along the placid Passaic river.

Big Hats and Long Hair.

THE REVOLUTION OF THE TEXAS SOMBRE, AND THE ADVANTAGES OF COWBOYS WEARING LONG LOCKS.

'Take,' says a cowboy of the plains, 'for instance, the cowboy's big rim med hat. The fact alone that it has been worn without changing fashion for generation after generation is enough to indicate that use, not vanity, dictated its origin.'

'Until recent years, when the importance of these hats was recognized by hat manufacturers, and wool, felt and fur were turned to account in making them, we made our own hats.'

'A hole, as near the shape and size of our heads as we could make it, was dug in the ground. A large circular piece of raw hide, wet, soft and pliable, was spread over the hole. With a bunch of grass or buckskin the centre of the raw hide was pressed down into the hole until it assumed its size and shape. The surrounding circle of hide, which was to be the rim, was kept flat on the ground by constant patting of the hands all around it.'

'When the hat was moulded it was left until it was well dried by the sun. Then it was taken to a place where smoke and heat scorched it so that it was perfectly waterproof. Then it was trimmed with strings and straps and was ready for use, and that use is often to throw a quickly-spreading fire back on the burned ground before it has a chance to gain headway; often to turn wild cattle and horses in the direction we want them to go.

'When the sun is scorching hot and there is a blister in every puff of wind, this great hat is much cooler than a straw hat. When the wind is blowing the sand like hot shot in our faces we would suffer greatly but for the protection afforded our eyes by the big rimmed hat. When the mud is flying from the heels of tampeding cattle, or the terrible hailstorms of the plains are pelting upon us, those hats are the best friends we have.'

'We wear leather bands on all our hats, because cotton, woollen, or silk won't wear and won't keep the hats on.'

'Now-a-days our hats are made in the East, and made of the best fur of the best water animal.'

'We can wash them or soak them in water for that matter, after they have been exposed to all kinds of weather, and they hold their shape as if they were just out of the factory. They will do service for many years.'

'The Stetson hat is the hat most commonly used in the West. They cost from $8 to $30. If made to order they cost a great deal more. I have seen hats that cost $500.'

'Buffalo Bill has had many hats of that kind presented to him from people that he has guided safely across the great plains in times of danger from hostile Indians and Mormons.'

'These fur hats have taken the place of the old home-made rawhide hats, as they answer every purpose.'

'As to our long hair, there are good reasons why we wear it. Our business is out doors, rain or shine and in many changes of climate and we have found from experience that the greatest protection to the eyes and ears is long hair.'

'Old miners and prospectors know this well. Hunters, scouts, trailers and guides let their hair grow, as a rule. Those who have been prejudiced against it have suffered the consequence of sore eyes, pains in the head, and loud ringing in the ears.'

'A peculiar result of exposure without the protection of long hair is loss hearing in one ear, caused by one or the other of the ears being exposed more when the plainsman is lying on the ground. Healthy hearing and eyesight are of the greatest importance to to a scout, hunter or herdsman.'

'When we see an object at a distance we want to know whether it is a cloud burst coming upon us, a prairie fire, an enemy in the neighborhood, or what it is. The longer we look at it the more distinct it becomes, if our eyes are good.'

'It won't do for them to be weak and watery, and, having found that the growth and wearing of long hair not only preserves but strengthens our sight and makes our hearing more acute, we let nature have her way in the matter, and profit by it.'

'There are some white men whose interests call them to live among the Indians, and it is a fact that by letting their hair grow they gain favor with the people they live among, and get along much better.'—N. Y. Sun.

GRAND RESULTS.

For several years R. H. Brown, of Lincardine, suffered from dyspepsia, he says he tried several physicians and a host of remedies without relief. His druggist recommended B. B. B. which he declares produced "grand results," for which he gives it his highest recommendation.

Constipation

Is a universal and most troublesome disorder. It causes Headache, Mental Depression, impairs the Sight and Hearing, destroys the Appetite, and, when long continued, causes Enlargement of the Liver, Inflammation of the Bowels, and Piles. Constipation is speedily cured by Ayer's Pills.

For a number of months I was troubled with Costiveness, in consequence of which I suffered from Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, and a disordered liver. My eyes also troubled me. I was compelled to wear a shade over them, and, at times, was unable to bear exposure to the light. I was entirely three boxes of Ayer's Pills. I have no hesitation in pronouncing this medicine to be the best cathartic ever made.—James Eccles, Poland, Ohio.

I suffered from Constipation, and, consequently, from Headache, Indigestion, and Piles, for years. Ayer's Pills, which I took at the suggestion of a friend, have given me effectual relief. I commenced taking this remedy two months ago, and am now free from Constipation, the removal of which has caused my other troubles to disappear, and greatly improved my general health.—W. Keeler, Amherst, Mass.

I suffered from Constipation, which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me, completely.—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

MANHOOD

How Lost, How Restored!

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

For Women

MOCK MODESTY IN YOUNG GIRLS.

A blush is something sacred to pure womanhood, and it is a sad spectacle for thoughtful eyes to note a young woman so far gone in the improprieties that she pretends to be shocked at things which simple unaffected candor is far from thinking of at all. There are otherwise modest and virtuous young ladies who manage to convey by subtle insinuations that they are deeply conscious of scenes which a really modest woman would ignore. It is true, indeed, as a great writer has said, that a woman must be at times both deaf and blind. Disagreeable happenings, offensive to eyes and ears, are at times incidental to almost every one's life. The most sheltered young lady cannot be entirely protected. She may find herself in places where profane language reaches her ears, where objectionable sights greet her eyes. It is then the time for her modesty to take on an armor of dignity. It is the time for her to be both deaf and blind.—Woman's Journal.

HOW SHE KEEPS HER WAIST DOWN.

A writer in the London Lady gives the following simple plan by which all the evils of wearing corsets may be done away with, while all the comfort in the way of warmth and support remain: I can with confidence recommend this plan as I have tried it for nearly ten years, and, although I am a materfamalias, my figure has not enlarged, but on the contrary, decreased an inch. I simply buy one or two yards of narrow elastic (I think at 1d the yard), and lace my corset. I was at first surprised at the support of this, almost as firm as the other method of lacing, while it gives at every breath. Don't suppose one is always exactly the same size; and why bandage tightly one's body when one would not even treat a limb in the same way? I also think that when the body is allowed to expand it also contracts as naturally; but if pinched it is sure to avenge itself by becoming more shapeless or getting thicker. If my plan were resorted to I am sure better figures in middle life would be the result, and, in the case of young matrons, better health to the next generation. I will finish by saying that people who suffer faintness, or who have to lie down during the day, will fully appreciate the comfort of lacing with narrow elastic.

WHY GIRLS GO WRONG.

That girls like bad boys best, and that they will forsake father and mother disregard the advice of their truest friends, and bring desolation to the hearts of all rather than renounce a dissolute fellow, are facts too patent to require proof. What is the cause of this? In well-to-do families the girls are spared every effort and deprived of every opportunity to exercise their will power, and consequently grow up wholly unprepared to exercise judgment, decision and action. The sentimental, poetic, delirous period arrives. The emotional nature, under the stimulus of awakening faculties, now becomes supreme, and the girl is wholly under its control. There should be no difference in a girl's and a boy's life until they are 10 years of age. She ought to be the equal of her brother in out-of-door sports. Until they are 15 years of age they ought to have the same training in school. As much ought to be expected from her as from him. After that time their education should differ, according to their different spheres of action. A true affection is an anchor to character, and if a girl's life were securely anchored at home she would not be so easily driven out to sea. The father, rather than the mother, is or can be a favorite with the daughter. If a father wishes to fortify his daughter against folly let him retain her love and confidence. Not simply respect and esteem, but love. And to do this he must feed the love of the child until that love ripens into the genuine affection of a woman. Many fathers deceive themselves. They think their daughters do love them. They will think this when they cannot remember ever to have had a confidential interchange of thoughts, aspirations and secrets such as we have only with those we love and fully trust. They cannot remember when they had a caress or anything but a formal kiss; and yet they think their daughters love them. Apply these tests: We confide in those we love. Does your daughter reveal her heart to you? We like to be with those we love. Does your daughter long for your companionship? Does she really enjoy being with you? Will she forsake the society of others to be with you? If your daughter has loved you and confided in you from infancy, and found in you that true friend that she ought to find, do you think she will forget all this and go contrary to your wishes? She will not fall in love, but will enter into love deliberately, and her father, who has her confidence, can counteract the leaning if he sees fit. When a young man comes to steal her heart he will find the good gentleman at home. If he wants that heart he must ask for it, and satisfy all parties concerned of his ability to treasure it. If he be a sneak thief he will soon be gone. If he be a true knight he will enter upon the conquest with a manly courage and bearing that itself is evidence of his worthiness.

Getting Even.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

'Ah! good morning!' he smiled across the aisle of the car.

'Good morning, sir,' stiffly replied the lady addressed.

'Did you enjoy your trip to the Bay?'

'What—when?'

'Last week, ma'am.'

'Why, I wasn't down there!'

'No! But I saw your husband down there, and the register of the hotel bore the names of—'

'Sh!' whispered a man beside him, at the same time giving his sleeve a pull.

'Bore what names?' sharply queried the woman as her fingers clenched.

But the two men stalked out of the front door and dropped off. She looked after them, shut her teeth hard together, and was out on the platform and ready to alight before the car was within a square of her street.

'Did you see him down there?' asked the friend, as the two got away from the car.

'Naw! Of course not?'

'What did you talk it for?'

'Her husband black-balled me in a society, and I've been laying for him for three years.'

IT WASN'T FOR HIM.—There were about a ball a dozen of them and they had been off somewhere in the country. They were all piled on a wagon and as they passed one of the numerous cottages a pretty woman accidentally turned a white handkerchief loose. There were six handkerchiefs waving wildly in the breeze in one instant.

'By Jove, she's pretty! I wonder who she is. That was meant for me.'

'It wasn't. It was meant for me,' said everybody but a little old man sitting on the bottom of the wagon hidden from sight.

'Well,' he said, 'I'll bet it was not meant for me.'

'Why?'

'Because that was my wife.'

And a dead silence fell on the picnic.

—A funny joke and all the more palatable as its truth can be vouched for, says a New Jersey paper, occurred at a prominent church in that state. It seems that a worthy deacon had been very industrious in selling a new church book, costing seventy-five cents. At the service in question the minister, just before dismissing the congregation, arose and said:

'All who have children to baptize will please present them next Sabbath.'

The deacon, who by the way, was a little deaf, having an eye to selling books and supposing the pastor was referring to them immediately jumped up and shouted:

'All you who haven't any can get as many as you want by calling on me, at seventy-five cents each.'—Portland Transcript.

BEAUTIFUL RAIN.—A citizen of Detroit, who probably intends to run on the next county ticket, met a farmer from Romulus on Michigan avenue yesterday and held out his hand and said: 'Ah, fine rain this!' 'Well, I dunno.' 'Do the crops lots of good.' 'It will, eh? What crops?' 'Well, er—you know—won't it help the crops?' 'It may soften up the dirt so I can dig out some old stumps.' 'Exactly—exactly—that's what I meant. Beautiful rain for softening—beautiful. Good-bye!'—Detroit Free Press.

—'Did you ever go to war, boss?' enquired a tramp of a farmer.

'No, sir; I did not; I have enough to do looking after my hogs.'

'Thanks!' ejaculated the tramp.

'What for?' asked the astonished granger.

'Because I have at last met the man who really believes that the pen is mightier than the sword.'

—The recent medical congress in the U. States was made up of the most self sacrificing men of this generation. It unanimously passed a resolution demanding that railroad companies devise more effective methods of preventing accidents. That was money out of pocket for the whole assembly.

—A party of ladies being assembled in a drawing-room, one of the number remarked that Captain Silk had just arrived in town with his regiment.

'Captain Silk!' exclaimed one of the ladies; 'what a name for a soldier.'

'The fittest name in the world,' rejoined a witty female, 'for silk, you know, can never be worsted.'

—'Money,' remarked the president, as he deposited a roll, the fruits of judicious combination—'money is power in the concrete.' 'And also in the abstract,' added the treasurer, a few hours later, as he conveyed the same roll to where the Ottawa hears no sound save its own O's and A's.—Burdette.
