MISCELLANY.

NEWSPAPER SUBSCRIBERS IN AMERICA.

COLLECTING THE ACCOUNTS.

The following amusing account of the sort of patronage of which the newspaper press in America can boast appears in a number of a "far west" journal, which has just reached us. It is no wonder, after reading the report which follows or the progress made in collecting the subscriptions, that our American contemporaries should enlogise to the third heavens, as the noblest being in creation, the "man who pays for his paper." The collector, it will be observed, reports progress to the unfortunate newspaper proprietor :—

"I have just returned from a tour through this state and proceed to furnish you with an account of my labours and their success. I have been gone for three months, and assure you, in all sincerity, that I am fully satisfied. You furnished me a list of 117 owing subscribers, as you will recollect. I have called upon 101 of them, and have the honour of paying over to your order 3 dollars and 12 1-2 cents, being the amount to which you are entitled. I return you the list, numbered from 1 to 117, and now give you the reply of each :—

"No. 1—Is a minister. He says, in the first place, he never got one half from the postmaster, and in the next place, your jocker's column was too scurrilous. He can't think of aiding to sustain a paper that advertises horse races and gander pulling. Besides, he knows from the tone of your editorials that you drink, and paying you would only be the means of your ending your days in the kennel. He wonders at your impudence in sending this bill, after publishing the great prize-fight between Lefthand Smoke and Battering Bill. He wants nothing to do with you—never wants to hear from you again.

"No. 2—Is in jail for debt. He has not seen a half-dollar for a year. Says he would pay with the utmost cheerfulness if he only had the money, but had to borrow a shirt to put on last Sunday. Admires your paper wonderfully, and hopes you will continue sending it to him. He wishes you to take a bold stand infavour of the abolition of imprisonment for debt, as he thinks it would be a very popular move with gentlemen in his situation. If you send him any more papers, hopes that you will see that the postage is paid, as otherwise he will be unable to enjoy your lucubrations. Sends his best respects.

"No. 3—Is a young doctor. Says your paper is beneath the notice of a gentleman. Wouldn't give a —— for a cart load. Says you inserted an article reflecting on the profession. Only wishes he could catch you here. Is going to persuade everybody that takes your paper to stop it. Cursed your bill, and says you may collect it in the best way you can.

"No. 4—Is an old maid. Says you are always taking a fling at single ladies of an uncertain age. Wouldn't pay you if she was rolling in wealth, and you hadn't cash enough to buy a crust of bread. Sent all the papers she had back a month ago, and says now that she sent them back, she don't owe you anything. Says she is even with you, and intends to keep so until the day of judgment. Asked me not to forget to tell you that you are no gentleman, or you wouldn't undertake to slander a large and respectable class of the female population of the country.

"No. 5 is a gambler—a sporting gentleman—says he got completely cleaned out last week at the races. Couldn't accommodate his grandmother with a half cent, if she was starving. Likes your paper tolerably—would like it better if you published more races and would occasionally give an account of a cock fight. Liked the description of the prize fight amazingly—it redeemed a multitude of your faults. Hopes you won't think hard of him for not paying you now ; but has got a prospect of soon having some loose change, as he is after a rich young greenhorn who arrived here last week.—

"No. 6—Is an old drunkard. Hasn't got anything, and never expects to have. Gathered up all the papers that he had, and sold them for half a pint of rum to the doggery keeper to wrap groceries in. Wish you would send him a pile, as they cost him no postage, his brother-in-law being post-master, and permitting him take out letters for nothing. Winked at me when I presented your bill, and inquired if I wasn't a distant relation of the man that butted the bull off the bridge.

"No 7—Is a magistrate. Swore he never owed you a cent, and told me that I was a low rascal for trying to swindle him in such a barefaced manner. Advised me to make tracks in a little less than no time, or he would get out a warrant against me as a common cheat, and have me sent to prison. Took his advice. Is, by all odds, the meanest man I have seen yet. Will never go near him again.

"No. 8—Is a politician. Says, although you profess to publish a neutral paper, it is not so.—Thinks he has seen considerable squinting towards the side to which he is opposed. Meant to have told you a year ago to stop the paper, but forgot it. Tells you to do so now, and thinks you are getting off very cheaply in not losing any more by him.—Believes you to be a rascal, and is too honourable to have anything to do with you, as it might compromise him and injure his prospects.

"No. 9—Paid up like a man. The only one—Likes your paper first rate, and means to take and pay for it as long as you publish it or he lives.—Asked me to dinner, and treated me like a king.—An oasis in the desert ! A man fit for heaven !

"No. 10—Is a merchant, expects to break shortly. Must save all his small change. Offered me a pair of breeches and a cotton handkerchief for the debt. Rejected them with scorn. Had a long jaw. Threatened to break my head. Dared him to it. Threw a hatchet at me. I dodged it and put out.

"Nos. 11 to 117—Mean as rot. Had no money—didn't owe. I swore I'd sue. They said I might sue and be hanged. Cursed all the little ones and hurried from the big. Never got the first red cent from one of them.

"The foregoing is a true extract from my note-book. I have not succeeded a whit better with the patrons of the other publications for which I am agent, and it is impossible to collect from those who are determined not to pay. I have said I have been away three months. I have expended in that period two hundred and ten dollars travelling, and my entire commissions amount to eighty-two dollars and forty-five cents. I am willing to do my share towards the propogation of news, but more than that no reasonable man could ask. This business don't exactly suit me—I can't stand it.

"Please accept my resignation, and strike my name from your list of agents. I admire your paper very much myself, but it would be a queer-looking sort of a concern that would come fully up to the requirements of every body. One wants independence in an editor—another don't want any. One wants all slang—another would'nt touch a journal that contained an irreverent line with a ten-feet pole. One sentimental, lackadaisical Miss in pantalettes, wanted nothing but love poetry, another never read anything but the marriages.

"All kinds of abuse I have to bear too. I wouldn't mind it so much if they only cursed you and your paper, but they curse me too ! Swindler, rascal, villain, blood-sucker, these are some of the names they think proper to bestow upon me.—Once I was put in jail for an assault and battery, and only escaped by breaking out.

"Send me a receipt for the three dollars twelve and a half cents, and believe me, yours in despair,

"AARON SWEATWELL."

TO CLEAR A WELL OF FOUL AIR.—Put a quart or two of unslacked lime into a bucket, and before lowering it into the well, pour a sufficient quantity of water on the lime to slack it ; then let them it down to the water, but not so low as to go into it. In a few minutes the well will be cleared of the foul air,—the slacking lime either taking up the noxious air or forcing it out of the well.—[London Builder.

Pants, procured on tick, are considered "breeches of trust."

CHINA.

Chinese New-Year—making calls—sending presents—Fireworks—Kitchen Gods—Foreign charity to Native Beggars—Soup establishment—distribution of tickets—Gipseys.

We (correspondent of Commercial Advertiser, Shanghia, February 17, 1852,) are just on the eve of the Chinese new year. It begins with the first moon after the sun enters Aquarius, which occurs this year on the 20th of February. It is the great holiday of the Chinese people, so far as cessation from labor is concerned, may be called the annual Sabbath, for it is the only season in the whole year in which the shops are closed and business of all kinds is universally suspended. It does in fact impress you strongly with the idea of a Sabbath in a Christian land, until you come to one of the numerous temples and shrines, while the illusion, if you were indulging it, is at once dispelled by the painful sight of multitudes prostrating themselves before hideous images of clay and wood, and burning incense stick, wax candles and gilt or tin-foiled paper, to propitiate these imaginary deities. The practice of making new-year's calls is carried on as extensively throughout this empire as it is by the good people of Gotham, and can boast an antiquity of some thousands of years. It has, however, a different a name. It is called "worshipping the year." On this occasion, when a Chinaman meets a friend at his house or in the streets, each clasps his own hands, instead of the others, and bowes his head almost to the ground, very slowly and ceremoniously, a number of times. As this operation must always be performed with due precision and solemnity, wherever one chances to meet his friends, the narrow streets are sometimes quite obstructed, when two scrupulously polite personages fall in each other's way on the public thoroughfare.

It is also a great occasion for sending presents—very often, I know from personal observation—for the express purpose of getting one of greater value in return. For instance, a Chinaman sends you a ham or a shoulder of mutton, a fowl or two, and some vegetables and fruit. You may be sure he has his eye upon something of yours, and if you are at all slow in taking the hint, he begins to admire your watch, perchance, and intimates in no unequivocal terms, that it would be acceptable as a return for his present. This polite way of begging is, perhaps, more extensively practised in their intercourse with foreigners, than among themselves : though it is by no means certain, that it does not prevail as widely in the native circles. This season is also the "fourth of July" of Chinese boys, and for several days preceding and following the first day of the new year, the incessant popping of fire-crackers, "double headers" et id genus omne would almost make one fancy himself in the Park at New York on the "Fourth," if he could only shut his eyes to the scenes around him. The nights, too, are illuminated by sky rockets, Roman candles, miniature volcanoes, and the like ; but all far inferior to the display of pyrotechny in the United States. The twenty-third of the last month in the year is an important day among these idolaters. In every house there is placed over the cooking range a rude figure coarsely painted on a bit of paper. This is called the kitchen god, and set up at the begining of each year, and is supposed to take cognizance of every thing that passes in the family during the year. Then at the close the paper kitchen god is taken down from the niche in the wall and placed on a table, more frequently, though allowed to remain in his customary place, and feasted upon small balls made of rice, flour, oranges, walnuts, and some other products of the vegetable kingdom, but neither fish, flesh nor fowl. In addition to these, a very adhensive kind of candy is placed before his godship, made in the form of Spanish dollars and lumps of Sycee silver. The design of this shape is to promote the increase of wealth in the family, and the design of the sticking quality of the candy is to seal the lips of the god when he is sent up to the chief of the Chinese celestial deities to report the conduct of the different members of the family during the past year ; so that when he is questioned, he cannot open his lips to relate the deviations from rectitude he may have observed, but can only nod his head, which is taken as signifying that all have behaved well in the family where he presided. But how is he to be sent up to heaven ? After having been duly feasted and worshipped, he is put into a kind of a pan, with some incense sticks and gilt paper, and the whole is set on fire. When all is consumed, the kitchen god is supposed to have ascended to the skies, to the presence of Yuh-wang-shang-te, to render in his account with tens of thousands of his comrades from swarming families of this vast empire. Truly, a sad picture of heathen degradation and superstitious credulity. For the last two or three winters, some of the benevolent foreigners at the place have got up a subscription to establish and sustain a "soup kitchen," from which hundreds of beggars and destitute poor of the native population receive a bowl of rice soup, or congee, every morning. Tickets are distributed to them on a bridge crossing a canal not far from the kitchen ; and each one reaching his ticket can pass over and get his bowl of congee. Strange as it may appear to you, a kind of brokerage is carried on with these tickets, and many, particularly of the smokers, who prefer a few "cash" to lay out a the purchase of his pernicious drug, will sell these tickets for half their value, even while they are almost starving for want of the food. So inveterate is the grasp by which this destructive habit holds its victims. Such an assemblage of squalid wretchedness as congregates each morning at the bridge before mentioned, to receive "tickets for soup," you certainly, I think, never saw, and would find it difficult to imagine. Beggars of every possible description, from decrepid age to prattling infancy many clad in mats of straw, with not even a rag of cloth, literally speaking, to screen them from the cold or to hide their nakedness—while others, a little better off, are supplied with rags, and that is all. There is a class who correspond to the character and habits of gipseys in Europe, and who flock to Shanghai in winter, and disappear with the return of warm weather. With these as with a vast number of constant residents here, beggary is a regular business, and they seem to thrive on it, for a fatter healthier, looking set of people, I never saw. They come among the rest to avail themselves of the bounty of the foreigners, and it is often quite an interesting, not to say an affecting sight, to see a mother with a fat chubby, smiling, naked babe, suspended in her bosom by a band of rags passing over her shoulders. This little nursling is taught, as soon as it can direct its tiny arms, to hold out its hand to every passer-by for a cash or two. It is impossible to resist the mute pleading of these pretty gipsey babies, and if you go out with a pocket full of copper cash, you will find it empty when you return, if many of these beggars have crossed your path.

DOCTOR OF DIVINITY.

When the university of Saint Andrew sold her honors, a certain minister, who deemed that his ministrations would be more acceptable and more useful if he posessed what the Germans called the "doctor's hat," put fifteen pounds in his purse, and went to Saint Andrews to purchase a degree.—His man servant accompanied him, and was present when his master was formally admitted to his long-desired honor. On his return, "the doctor" sent for him, and addressed him as follows :—

"Noo, Saunders, ye'll ay be sure to ca' me the doctor ; and gin nobody speers at ye aboot me, ye'll ay be sure to say, the Doctor's in his study, or the Doctor's engaged, or the Doctor will see you in a crack."

"That a' depends," was the reply, "whether ye ca' me the Doctor, too." The Reverend Doctor started. "Ay, it's just so," continued the other ; "for when I fand that it cost see little, I e'en got a diploma myself. Sae, ye'll just be good enough to say—Doctor, put on some coal ; or Doctor, bring the whisky and hot water ; and gin ony speers about me, ye'll be sure to say the Doctor's in the stable, or the Doctor's in the pantry, or the Doctor's digging potatoes, as the case may be."

DEEP PLOWING AND THOROUGH CULTIVATION.

It is a fact clearly demonstrated by the experience of some of the best farmers that thirty acres of land well plowed and cultivated will yield more corn than forty acres cultivated after the manner of a majority of the Western farmers. Land, where the soil is of sufficient depth, if plowed from seven to ten inches deep, is in a far better condition to withstand the drought of summer than if but barely skinned, as it is too often done. It is also equally serviceable in case of excessive wet. Rolling on broken land is much less liable to wash by heavy rains when plowed deep and the whole surface rendered loose and mellow, than when broken up three or four inches in depth. If a field designated to be planted with corn is plowed to a suitable depth and the clods thoroughly broken with the roller, and the surface kept mellow by the frequent use of the plow and cultivator up to time of "laying by," the corn will compatively suffer little even during our dryest summers.

It is equally important that the ground for oats or other spring grains be plowed deep and the surface thoroughly pulverized to enable the plants to withstand the effects of the drought, which almost invariably follows in the months of May and June. The improvement in the plow and the introduction of the roller will do much to counteract the effects of the drought upon the crops of the farmer.

The Double Michigan Plow we regard as one of the most valuable improvements in our agricultural implements. At first sight, one would be led to suppose that it would require more strength of team to accomplish the same work with this than with the common single plow ; but it has been ascertained, by repeated trials, to the contrary ; the furrow slice being raised and inverted by two separate shares and mould boards, one following immediately behind and below the other.

In plowing land dry and much baked, it has been ascertained by the dynamometer that the difference in favor of the double plow is still greater. In plowing sod land, no other plow has ever equalled this. The furrowed share inverts the sod, about three inches in thickness, into the furrow below, while the other entirely covers it with mellow earth to a depth beyond the reach of the plow in laying off and in the subsequent cultivation ; and hence the sod remains undisturbed, to discompose at the period when it is rendered most available as manure to the growing crop.

In some lands, and particularly where the soil is thin, it would be found preferable to use a sub-soil plow. As an instance of the profitable result of deep plowing we find it stated in the January number of the Indiana Farmer, that Mr. Harris received the highest premium offered by the Wayne County Agricultural Society for the best five acres of corn. The field contained ten acres. It had been cleared twenty-one years, and it has had eighteen crops grown upon it. It was plowed about the 10th of April, ten inches deep, four inches deeper than it was ever plowed before. The five acres yielded 120 bushels and upwards per acre, or more than 1,200 bushels from the field of ten acres.—Louisville Journal.

WHAT WAS FOUND INSIDE THE AMERICAN SEA-SERPENT.

The papers make mention of the contents of the American Sea Serpent, when its stomach was cut open. We were sadly disappointed with the poverty of the Catalogue. The principle article in it seems to have been a "squid,"—whatever that may be. We have seen many wonderful things in our lifetime, but we never recollect seeing a "squid." We suppose it must be one of the numerous (s)quiddities to which the American Sea-Serpent, in its extraordinary career has given birth.

But we are confident there must have been some terrible omissions in the Catalogue. When we think of its swallow—and of the capacity of the public's swallow, also, with regard to it—we are sure there must have been inside the American Sea Serpent something more than a mere "squid." If not a great opportunity has been lost in the way of invention, and we hasten to supply the list of the articles that were or ought to have been, inside "its stomach."

The Disappearance of the Falls of Niagara ;—an authentic account of that wonderful freak of nature, as related in the American papers several years ago.

The Certificate of the birth of Washington's black nurse, and a mug belonging to the same, with the inscription "A trifle from Brighton."—(These have been bought for 20,000 dollars by Mr. Barnum.)

A hearthrug made from the wool that was shorn from the celebrated "Woolly Horse." This has likewise been purchased, at an enormous sacrifice by Mr. Barnum.)

The Whip with which America flogs all creation, and the American Flag, showing the "Stripes" that were received from it.

A Pennsylvahian Bond, with "Paid" at the bottom.

A New Orleans Paper, without an advertisement of a runaway Slave in it.

The Ruler with which Britannia ruled the waves before she was beaten last year at Cowes by the Yankee yacht, America.

Portraits of the 250,000 British ladies that were kissed by General Tom Thumb.

Cheque-books of the American Publishers who have ruined themselves with the enormous sums of money they have given to English authors for their works—very curious.

The Green Spectacles which the clever Dairyman put on his cows when he turned them into a chalk pit, to persuade them they were eating grass.

The colour of the Gentleman's Money, who was so tarnation sharp, that his shadow even cut thin bread and butter.

Portrait of the fast young New Yorker who, when called upon to pay the debt of nature, proposed to do it one half in dry goods, the other half in bills.

But this is quite enough to prove the number of things and people the American Sea-Serpent has taken in ever since it has been running through the seas, and the columns of the American newspapers.

THE HEIGHT OF 'CUTENESS.—A Yankee Jew attorney, of Scotch parentage.

MURDER WILL (SHORTLY OUT) !

A biographical periodical announces, as the title of one of its principle articles, "Lord Palmerston concludes." It is an old story, to talk of a writer attempting an individuals life ; but poor Lord Palmerston seems to have been treated with unusual cruelty ; for, his "conclusion" being advertised, we presume that the tempter of his life has actually made an end of him.

CHOOSING A WIFE.—Picking out a wife, says some one, is very much like picking out an apple from a barrel in a dark cellar. About as good a way as any is, to take the first that offers. Our American Indians have a singular custom : when a wife dies, the husband is obliged to marry the sister, or, in her stead, the woman whom the family of the deceased shall select. This savage method, for aught known to the contrary, may be as good as the civilized ;—to see the ill-assorted couples to be met with in "refined" society, one were almost tempted to believe so. After all, choosing a wife and picking out a razor, are the choicest privileges of a freeman. The pursuit of either is, literally, a "pursuit of knowledge under difficulties," while the chances are, ten to one, that a man gets shaved in the end—at least, so says a wag at our elbow.

THE BEAM IN THINE OWN EYE.—Alas ! how unreasonable as well as unjust a thing it is for us to censure the infirmities of another, when we see that even good men are not able to dive through the mystery of their own. Be assured there can be but little honesty, without thinking as well as possible of others ;—there can be no safety without thinking humbly and distrustfully of ourselves.
