Life for a Life.

Solomon Islanders and Whites.

A Frenchman, Captain Hilien, employed by a British soap firm as a recruiter of labour and commander of a small steamboat the Hawk, which was recruiting native labor on the west coast of Malaita Island—noted for its cannibalism and the general ferocity of its inhabitants—has been attacked by two natives armed with knives and very severely wounded.

Captain Hilien struggled gamely with his naked assailants till one of the native "boys," hearing the sounds of the fight, ran up with a crowbar and split open the head of one of the Malaita men—the other diving overboard and getting clear away. A hurried return was made to Tulagi—the capital of the Solomon Island group—where Captain Hilien was placed in hospital. The prisoner was subsequently sentenced to a long term of imprisonment.

This attack, though apparently unprovoked, has its origin in the ancient law of "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." During the past 12 months three Malaita natives, working on plantations in other parts of the group, have been killed by white men—either shot, or so roughly manhandled that they have died later. The white men involved have since been tried and exonerated. The dead men's relatives in Malaita, therefore, are now "out" for the heads of three white men in revenge, and the attack on Capt. Hilien was an attempt to obtain the first. It matters not whether the white man be known to the Malaita natives or not—his head—any head—is what they intend to obtain.

Riches in the Corsets.

Our little community was afforded a thrilling spectacle when the Defiance—a 600-ton 4-masted schooner—lying fully loaded with copra in Faisi Harbour, suddenly broke into flame, and in spite of the efforts of the crew and the few local inhabitants was burnt to the water's edge.

The captain, his wife, and the crew, escaped in the dinghy, and a touch of humour was supplied when the captain's wife, after floundering ashore, suddenly began to bewail the loss of her corsets, which, in the confusion, had been left behind. Her anxiety for the recovery of this intimate garment was explained by the fact that a safe-deposit receipt for £3,000 worth of jewellery was secreted therein. The gallant captain retrieved the corsets amid loud and prolonged cheering.

A Miraculous Infant.

The dying-out of native races in the Pacific is illustrated by the case of the Island of Gomai, which lies 4 miles away from Faisi. In years gone by a thronged and thriving centre of native life, it is now reduced to a bare 50 inhabitants.

During the past twelve months 6 of these have died, and recently occurred the only birth that has been recorded in 2 years!

The house of Crina—the father of the child—is thronged daily with interested natives of both sexes, and it seems unlikely that the miraculous infant can possibly survive the frequent exhibitions and fondlings.—London Daily Mail.

Imagination at Bridge.

By A. E. MANNING FOSTER.

Imagination certainly comes in at auction bridge. But it must be cultivated, curbed and restrained, tempered by knowledge, reason, and deduction.

The brilliant player uses his imagination. He forms swift mental pictures of the cards he cannot see. He visualizes them. Coupled with intuition, which is often an accompaniment of the imaginative faculty, amazing results are produced. It is almost as if the player, in some uncanny fashion, can see through the backs of the cards.

There are many excellent players who will never be quite first-class because they are devoid of imagination. They make few mistakes. But they plod on where the card genius soars. They play by rule of thumb, but they are never "inspired." In fact they frequently rather resent the idea that there is more in auction bridge than skill and knowledge—a psychic quality which cannot be explained exactly.

Failure in imagination is a fault of most weak players. They cannot imagine that their partners are silent because they like the opponents' call, and they blunder into some silly bid of their own instead of leaving well alone. They cannot imagine that a good "no-trump" bid may be bad as support of a suit call, and they are equally at fault because they cannot imagine that their partners may have a good double although it does not fit their hands. The unimaginative bridge player is one who cannot conceive possibilities beyond his own cards.

On the other side are players who have too much imagination or in whom the quality runs riot.

We all have experience of partners who imagine their hands are better than they are or who are led to bid by secondary calls or to double on the strength of them.
