Prizes Catch many women. What do prizes amount to? Not worth considering. Cannot pay you for poorer work, greater expense and risk to clothes, which you get with an inferior washing powder. Any woman who uses PEARLINE has a prize, and will save enough to buy more and better knick-knacks.

ELSIE.

To this suggestion the captain at once assented. He just took up his cards to finish playing out that hand, again put money into his pocket, then apologized to Lord Gretna.

"After supper," he said, "we will resume the game, my lord; but this lady—an especial friend of my daughter's—I must pay my respects to her."

Lord Gretna bowed in cold fashion. He was not at all a pleasant-looking young man, Elsie thought; and then she found his sad, saucer eyes fixed on herself. She did not blush or simper, as nine girls out of ten might have done—at least, nine out of ten would certainly have blushed.

Elsie's heart was too heavy for vanity. She did not know any of the ladies present. Lady Rosewood was not of the party. She sat apart, and she saw Captain Bracegirdle bending over Miss Stanly's chair, and smiling like a lover into her eyes, while Rosa laughed and chattered. Pauline stood by Lord Gretna, and entered into conversation, or, rather, into small talk. The buzz became general, the card-players at the other tables continued their games. Above the other voices rose the languid drawl of Lord Gretna:

"As sure to be hung as his name is Hammond; not a shred of evidence in his favor. I heard it from Shylock, the nephew of the attorney-general; all the legal men are of one opinion. You see, he did shoot him—that's the point!"

A dead silence followed this assertion for an instant; then again there was the hum and buzz of voices.

It seemed to be Elsie's fate to stand in Pauline's way.

When supper was announced the daughter of the host had expected that Lord Gretna would have offered her his arm; but pale Elsie, in her black dress and yellow daffodils, had attracted the consumptive nobleman's attention. He ignored Pauline and came to offer to conduct Elsie to the supper room, and the guests trooped down.

Surely things must have been prospering more with the captain in London than they had in Paris. The supper was excellent and abundant, and champagne flowed freely. There was game, fish and pastry; there was fruit, and there were flowers; there was also silver and crystal.

Rosa ate heartily and chattered volubly. Elsie asked only one question of Lord Gretna during supper.

"Where is Mrs. Bracegirdle" she inquired. "I knew her in Paris."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

"Mrs. Bracegirdle is dead," said Lord Gretna, in reply to Elsie; "died of typhoid or something; so the old scamp came to London. I knew them all in Paris long ago; did you?"

"Yes," said Elsie, shortly.

She did not express any regret at the poor lady's death; she only thought to herself that she must now be at peace.

"The girl," said Lord Gretna, "is gone back to her mother's friends. I wonder what they'll think of her? She's ugly, you know."

Elsie was silent.

"And now the game of the old sinner and of mademoiselle his daughter is a deeper one. Do you guess it?"

"Oh, dear, no!" replied Elsie, with a tinge of contempt in her tone.

"Well, then, I'll tell you," said the nobleman. "He means to marry your friend the heiress, Miss Stanly Pic—ahem! I know she is enormously rich. If you have any influence with those good people, tell them, with my compliments, that old Bracegirdle is a scamp. He has talked of the fortune he is expecting for the last six weeks. We couldn't make it out, but I can read it by the light of the gas tonight."

Certainly Lord Gretna was not a very refined man; but Elsie felt that, though he might seek distraction in various queer ways—such as losing gold by handfuls at nap—that he was honest, and there did not seem, so her girlish instincts told her, to be any harm in him.

"If I knew the Pic—I mean the Stanlys," said Lord Gretna, "I would often call upon them if I thought I might see you sometimes. They are good sort of people I have heard."

Elsie did not smile or blush this time either.

"What a very odd little maiden she seems!" said Lord Gretna to himself. "In training for a nun, one would say."

Once more at home in Kensington, Rosa in bounding spirits.

"Fancy that girl telling me that her father is in love with me!" cried Rosa. "Oh, Elsie, how thankful I am that my part is in safe keeping; but I did not tell them that! Do you know, when I told them that, for the assizes, we mean to go to Guildford next week, because my father thinks, if he is there, he might do something for poor Owen, they both said they were going too, and intended to put up at County Town Hotel, in the High street; that's where we are going."

"It will be fearful," sobbed Elsie, "to have them there then!"

But Elsie did not know what was about to happen.

* * * * * *

Such a hot August day! Elsie sat at the open window of the County Town Hotel, and watched the judges start forth in all the pomp of circumstance in their carriage and four. There was a crowd in the quaint street, with its time-honored picturesque buildings. Men and boys threw up their hats, and cried hurrah! Carriages filled with fine ladies drove swiftly along. The bells rang joyous peals, the flowers on the balcony sent out sweet perfumes. What a festival nature and men seem to be making of the trial of Owen Hammond for murder! It was the cause celebre of the day; nearly all the county would flock to the town on the next day, when his trial began. Pauline Bracegirdle and her father occupied rooms on the same floor as the Stanlys. Captain Bracegirdle was following Rosa up with assiduity. Good-natured Mr. Stanly suspected nothing; and Rosa, who had never played a game of coquetry before in her life, entered into the spirit of the affair with a relish that astonished Elsie.

It was only to be near the Stanlys that the Bracegirdles came to these assizes. Pauline looked so pale that she was absolutely ghastly under her rouge. She had been unable to eat or to sleep for nearly a week. Her father hoped that the sweet country air would revive her; but while Elsie sat wrapped in gloom, in the window, looking into the sunny street, the door burst open and Captain Bracegirdle rushed in.

"Miss Carew, you are kind I know! Pauline is in a fit. I almost think she is dead! She fell down after breakfast. I can't rouse her."

Elsie ran swiftly into the sitting-room of the captain. Pauline lay on the floor white and rigid, with glassy, staring eyes. It was some sort of fit. Elsie went and put strong ammonia to Pauline's nostrils, and presently there was a slight convulsive twitching of the muscles.

"Send for a doctor," said Elsie.

Captain Bracegirdle was like a madman; he broke the bell as he rang it, and, when the servants appeared, he could hardly speak.

"A doctor!" said Elsie, "a doctor! the first in the town."

There are many good doctors in the chief town of Surrey.

A white-haired gentleman soon arrived. Pauline was lifted on the couch, and her feet plunged into hot water. Then, after awhile, a shiver passed over her; the rigid limbs relaxed, her eyes moved, her lips moved; consciousness came back; but she was only the wreck of her former self.

"Perfect quiet, complete rest of body and mind," said the doctor.

"Rest!" said Pauline, gasping. "My heart, it is agony! Do relieve my pain, else I would rather die."

The doctor looked grave. Other medical assistance was called in. An examination was made, and then a sentence was pronounced. Pauline Bracegirdle was suffering from the acutest form of heart disease. She had not more than twenty-four hours to live. Immediately Captain Bracegirdle telephoned to London, offering the fee of one hundred guineas to Sir Peter Pattison, the heart doctor, if he would come to see his daughter; and Sir Peter came, but his verdict was the same—death within twenty-four hours—and there Pauline lay, gasping in anguish, begging for that relief which no mortal power could give. And the great doctor, who was a feeling man and a religious man, when he heard who the Bracegirdles were, and that they were poor, took a small fee in lieu of his hundred pounds.

"But you must tell your daughter," he said, "it strikes me she has something on her mind."

"Who is to tell her?" shrieked Bracegirdle. "I can't!" and the unhappy man ran into his own room and locked the door.

The Guildford doctor and Sir Peter then undertook to tell Pauline Bracegirdle that she must die. Elsie and Rosa Stanly stood by her side, and sympathetic tears were in their eyes. Elsie now forgave from her heart all the wrong that Pauline had done her.

GIRL WOMEN.

The general standard of measurement for womanhood is "grown-up-ness." When a girl is emancipated from school and arrives at the dignity of trailing skirts and elaborate hair dressing she is looked upon as a young woman. But nature knows nothing of such standards. When the womanly function is established womanhood is attained according to her standards, and there is need of womanly care and caution. It is girlish ignorance or neglect at this critical time which often results in long years of after misery.

Mothers who perceive the evidences of functional derangement in young girls should promptly have them begin the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It establishes regularity, tranquilizes the nerves and tones up the whole system.

"My troubles started during my girlhood," writes Miss Flora I. Greer, of 107 Howe Street, Akron, O., "but did not prove serious until 1893. From that time I did not see a well day. I suffered at every monthly period with terrible headache, irritation of the spine and pains in my heels. I had soreness through my hips and ovaries all the time and constant backache. One doctor would tell me one thing ailed me, another would say something altogether different, but they only relieved me. I then wrote you and followed your advice. I took five bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, four of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and five vials of 'Pellets.' Have not had a single symptom of my old trouble so far. Can sleep good, work hard, and eat solid and substantial food without distress."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cleanse the bowels and stimulate the sluggish liver.

"PRINCESS CHIC" TONIGHT.

Marguerita Sylva, who is to make her first appearance in this city as a star at the New Grand this evening in "The Princess Chic," is a Belgian by birth. Her native home is in Brussels. Brussels has been styled a pocket edition of Paris, and this may account for the dash and spirit that characterize Miss Sylva's work. She spent some years of study in Paris, and this doubtless added to the native chic and jaunty grace of her manner. She has a dainty suggestion of a foreign accent that adds realism and charm to her sprightly and mettlesome interpretation of the title role in this pretty opera comique. The sale of seats and boxes has been very large.

"FROM SCOTLAND YARD."

The bill at the New Grand next Saturday (matinee and evening) will be the thrilling melodrama "From Scotland Yard." The prices will be on a popular scale. The story of the play is the endeavor of a young Irish detective, Cleve Ryley, to hunt down a band of bold and bad burglars. In the end he accomplishes this purpose, and as the play closes the whole gang is brought to justice.

"THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH.

The management of the New Grand is to be congratulated upon having secured for early presentation Mr. J. H. Stoddart in "The Bonnie Brier Bush," with the entire original cast and production as seen during its brilliant presentation in New York city. Ian Maclaren's charming sketches of Drumtochty life are well known, and it is upon these that James MacArthur has founded the play which has won such praise as is seldom accorded a theatrical production. "The Bonnie Brier Bush" will be the attraction at the New Grand next Monday evening. The advance sale of seats and boxes will open Friday morning.

"A BRACE OF PARTRIDGES."

Few actors and comedians have made so instantaneous an impression on the theater-going public as Mr. Reeves-Smith has in his dual character as Alfred and Arthur Partridge in the charming comedy entitled "A Brace of Partridges." Mr. Reeves-Smith has the utmost right to feel proud of his work. Supporting Mr. Reeves-Smith is Miss Margaret Robinson, together with an exceptionally strong cast. This high-class company will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House for a return engagement on Tuesday, Nov. 26.

AT THE LONDON OPERA HOUSE.

Tonight's attraction at the London Opera House will be "The Great Diamond Robbery," said to be the strongest piece in the repertoire of the Castle Square Stock Company. The cast includes Jimmy Callahan as the funny little Irishman. A complete change of specialties will be given. "Ermani," who presents the famous fire dance, will give for the only time this week her latest and best dance, "The Aerial Butterfly." A novel matinee will be given on Saturday next, when school cards will be distributed. The scholar who makes the most words out of the title "Castle Square Stock Company," will be given a prize in money, which will be presented at the matinee. "Triss," the Mountain Waif," will be the bill for the afternoon.

THE FIGHTING IN THE PHILIPPINES

Americans Wiped Out Three Camps—Captured 40 Bamboo Guns.

Washington, Nov. 20.—The following cablegram has been received from Cavite, Nov. 20:

"Waller reports on 17th marines attacked almost impregnable position Sojoton, Samar, destroying three camps, killing 30 men, capturing 40 bamboo guns, rice and stores. He reports no casualties and commends Porter, Bearss and other officers."

Major Waller's detailed account of the affair says:

"The rebel stronghold was almost impregnable. The trails leading to it were lined with poisoned spears sticking from the ground, and were filled with hidden pitfalls. Major Waller's command attacked the enemy unexpectedly. To do this they had climbed barefooted over bamboo ladders. At the top they found boulders piled ready to precipitate upon any attacking party. Major Waller says he was personally not present at the action. The major considers the scaling of the cliffs, 200 feet high, as a new feature of warfare, and says such men would be able to do anything anywhere. Thirty of the enemy were killed. The marines sustained a few trifling wounds.

POSTMASTERS SNARED

By a New Green Goods Game—Swindled in Efforts to Buy Counterfeit Stamps—Work of Burglars.

New York, Nov. 21.—According to the Journal the best men in the United States secret service are working to discover details of a new green goods scheme worked until a week ago from Manhattan, and at present being operated from Jersey City and Chicago. The victims are second, third and fourth-class postmasters, who do not dare complain. It is known that since the 1st of July more than a thousand postmasters have been swindled out of sums ranging from $250 to $1,000. The postmasters are urged to purchase postage stamps from "the undestroyed plates of the government," which, of course, are not in existence. The samples sent by mail are genuine stamps and when the victim reaches the city the old-fashioned game of substitution is practiced.
