At the Institute.

Bradley's players gave a Terrible Test in the Institute last evening. The plot of the play is very interesting and every character was in excellent hands. Hudson Liston as the typical old English farmer, the father of Margaret Wheatland, was very strong in the emotional parts and at the close of the third act was called before the curtain. Miss Huntington as Margaret Wheatson, was faultless in her representation of that difficult character. F. M. Kendrick, as Gustavus Jones; Edmund Collier, as Clement Flint and George Scott as Nicholas Quadling, were frequently and deservedly applauded.

A Terrible Test will be given for the last time to night.

Aunt Jack is billed for Monday evening. This farical comedy has met with unbounded success in New York and London and will beyond doubt be well presented by Bradley's players, who are really as fine a company as have been billed here for a long time.

Police Court.

Robert Murphy was charged by Wilmot Lyons with assaulting him. Mr. H. A. McKeown appeared for the defense. Several witnesses were examined and deposed that Murphy had committed no assault, that Lyons had refused to leave Murphy's premises when ordered, and had, furthermore, raised his hand to the defendent. The magistrate dismissed the case with costs against Lyons, saying, at the same time, that Murphy would have been justified in ejecting Lyons, when he refused to leave the former's premises, when ordered.
