THE WORLD I AM PASSING THROUGH.

By Lydia Maria Child.

Few, in the days of early youth,
Trusted like me in love and truth,
I've learned sad lessons from the years;
But slowly, and with many tears;
For God made me to kindly view
The world that I am passing through

How little did I once believe
That friendly tones could e'er deceive!
That kindness, and forbearance long,
Might meet ingratitude and wrong!
I could not help but kindly view
The world that I am passing through.

And though I've learned some souls are base,
I would not, therefore, hate the race;
I still would bless my fellow men,
And trust them, though deceived again.
God help me still to kindly view
The world that I am passing through.

Through weary conflicts I have passed,
And struggled into rest at last;
Such rest as when the rack has broke
A joint, or nerve, at every stroke.
The wish survives to kindly view
The world that I am passing through.

From all that fate has brought to me
I strive to learn humility,
And trust in Him who rules above,
Whose universal law is love.
Thus only can I kindly view
The world that I am passing through.

When I approach the setting sun,
And feel my journey nearly done,
May earth be veiled in genial light,
And her last smile to me seem bright!
Help me till then to kindly view
The world that I am passing through!

And all who tempt a trusting heart
From faith and hope to drift apart—
May they themselves be spared the pain
Of losing power to trust again!
Gold help us all to kindly view
The world that we are passing through!

A GRAND DUKE'S VIEW OF CHICAGO.

The Russian Grand Duke Boris, cousin of the Czar, who, with his staff, is completing a tour of the world, evidently found Chicago much to his liking. When first the flag of the Grand Duke was raised over the Russian consulate on Rush street, his plans contemplated a stay of only two days in the city by Lake Michigan. But once caught in the current of strenuous western hospitality, Boris postponed his departure from day to day, and nearly two weeks passed before the flag was finally lowered. During that time the Grand Duke assisted in the dedication of a Russian church; he went coaching through the summer settlements on the North Shore; he visited the stock-yards and the university; he played polo at the Onwentsia Club, and ran a racing automobile into an oak tree; he was the guest of honor at innumerable dinners and luncheons; he went up to Lake Geneva, the Newport of the west, around which the rich men of Chicago have built a circle of summer palaces, and there looked at the stars through the great Yerkes telescope; he drank champagne from the white satin slipper of a Chicago chorus-girl; and, finally, in departing, he left this picturesque message to his hosts: "Most truly I dare not tell you how much I like Chicago. You would not believe. Let me, to make farewell, give opinion that it is one most square spot of all I discover. I hate to go away from it, and, as you Americans say, you bet I shall return." The one incident of the Grand Duke's stay in Chicago to which especial significance is attached is his acceptance of an invitation to luncheon at the Standard Club, an organization composed entirely of wealthy Jews. The speeches made on that occasion are taken to indicate that the policy which has within recent years driven so many Jews from the land of the Czar is no longer believed in by at least one member of the Russian royal family.—Harper's Weekly.
