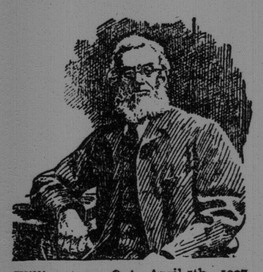
"FRUIT-A-TIVES" SAVED HIS LIFE

Mr. Dingwall was Superintendent of St. Andrews Sunday School in Williamstown for nine years and License Commissioner for Glengarry — and Tax Collector for Charlottenburg—for fourteen years continuously. Read how strongly Mr. Dingwall comes out in favor of "Fruit-a-tives."



Williamstown, Ont., April 5th., 1907.

I have much pleasure in testifying to the almost marvellous benefit I have derived from taking "Fruit-a-tives." I was a life long sufferer from Chronic Constipation and the only medicine I ever secured to do me any real good was "Fruit-a-tives." This medicine cured me when everything else failed. Also, last spring, I had a severe attack of bladder trouble with kidney trouble, and "Fruit-a-tives" cured these complaints for me, when the physician attending me had practically given me up. I am now over eighty years of age and I can strongly recommend "Fruit-a-tives" for Chronic Constipation and bladder and kidney trouble. This medicine is mild like fruit, is easy to take, but most effective in action.

(Sgd) JAMES DINGWALL.

"Fruit-a-tives"— or "Fruit Liver Tablets" are sold by dealers at 50c a box —6 for $2.50—or will be sent on receipt of price. Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Consider Your Feet!

You demand a coat that fits right the first time on. Why buy a shoe that doesn't, and has to be painfully "broken in"?

You can always get a

that fits every part of your foot the first time on, and always gives you solid comfort.

The more you wear "Travellers" the more you'll wonder how we make them at the price—$3.50 to $4.50.

Fashion Hint for Times Readers

LITTLE GILRS WE AR LARGE HATS.

Runabout or playtime hats for little girls are as simple of design and trimming as those worn by the cowboys of the Western plains. Although of coarsely woven straw and trimmed merely with a corded ribbon band, the rough-and-ready feminine hat is decidedly picturesque. Because it gets rather hard usage in the mountains or by the sea, the cowboy type of hat should be of dark brown, blue or green to accord with the plaided gingham morning frock. It is placed ever so slightly at one side of the head and kept in place by a broad elastic band, which passes under the hair behind the ears.

"We are going away for a little time," he explained. "The fact of the matter is, your guardian has not been well lately But you must have noticed that for yourself. He has had a great deal to try him, too, and he is afraid of a breakdown. We are going to Weymouth direct from Lord Ringmar's house, and not a soul is to know anything about it. You see, if we stay and make elaborate preparations, it will take quite a week to make a start. It is far better to let people know afterwards that Lord Ravenspur has been ordered away peremptorily and that he is to have perfect rest for the next month or so. Only I can't sufficiently impress upon you the necessity of keeping this thing absolutely secret."

"Even from Lady Ringmar?" Vera cried.

"From everybody," Walter said, somewhat sternly. "Vera, your guardian is in great danger. You are in great danger yourself. I dare not tell you more now, but perhaps I shall be permitted to say it later on. Go about your business today just as if nothing had happened."

Vera asked no further questions. She was perhaps just a little hurt that Walter had refused to take her into his confidence. At the same time, she was young and vigorous, and the thought of a change was not displeasing. She passed out of the house presently with a view to a walk in the park. She stopped before a feeble, blind old man who was dolefully grinding out hymns on a dilapidated organ. A boy of some ten or twelve years was guiding the unfortunate man along the pavement. Vera took out her purse, and placed a shilling in the little tin cup which the boy was carrying.

"I have not seen you here before," she said kindly.

The man murmured something to the effect that this was his first day with the organ. He seemed uneasy and undecided in his manner, and, naturally enough, Vera put this down to the strangeness of his surroundings. Then she hastened on to the park, and the little incident passed from her mind. She had tea subsequently with a friend in Grosvenor Square, and when she came back, barely in time to dress for dinner, she saw that the blind man was still in the Lane, grinding industriously at his melancholy airs.

"I suppose Walter has told you," Ravenspur said as they sat down to dinner. "You know where we are going?"

"He told me part," Vera said. "Really, I don't quite understand what all this mystery means."

"Indeed, it is absolutely necessary," Ravenspur said gravely. "It is as necessary for your happiness as it is for mine. I have done my best to safeguard your welfare——"

"Oh, yes, yes," Vera cried contritely. "I am a most ungrateful girl to speak in that way. After all, I am looking forward to the trip. It is probably the last happy time we shall have together. Yes; I have quite made up my mind to get my own living. But we won't discuss that to-night."

Dinner was over at length and the carriage was ordered round. Vera came downstairs presently; her cheeks were flushed, her eyes were sparkling. She was very alluring and attractive in her white dress. She had made up her mind to be absolutely happy tonight. The dress was a special present from Lord Ravenspur, and Vera had been afraid to ask what the Paris house had charged for it. Still it was the last extravagance she was going to put Lord Ravenspur to.

"I declare there is my old blind man still," she said, as she got into the carriage. "He must have been here all day. I must make enquiries, and see what I can do for him."

The door of the carriage was banged to, and the horses trotted away. As they passed the spot where the blind man was standing he suddenly ceased his doleful airs and whistled softly. A moment later and a shabby figure came shuffling down the Lane.

"That's right Stevens," the blind man said in a quick, clear voice. "Now here's the note, and, mind, you are not to deliver it before half-past twelve. This is most important. If you are successful, come back to me at the appointed spot, and I will see that you get your money—fifty pounds."

CHAPTER XXVIII

Vera's Warning.

Amongst her many friends, and in the keen enjoyment of the evening, Vera forgot her fears. She was young enough to appreciate to the full the joys of life. She was strong and vigorous and most things pleased her. Besides, there was always the reflection that the gates would be closed to her before long. Once she had taken her fate in her own hands, and had gone into the world to get her living, there would be no more of this. A little longer and she would say good-bye to Lord Ravenspur and Walter. Of course, the wrench would be a bitter one, for she was by no means blind to the hardships and privations of the poor.

Still, she put that out of her mind now. She was going to have a very pleasant evening, and by this time tomorrow she would be far away from the heat and dust and bustle of London. In her mind's eye she could see the yacht sliding over the water. She could see the moon shining on the waves, and turning their crests to molten silver.

The big house was crowded to its utmost capacity, for Lady Ringmar was one of the most prominent of society women, and invitations to her entertainments were eagerly sought after. The rooms were filled. At the end of the long corridor Vera caught a peep of the garden, all aglow with points of flame from the electric lights entwined about the trees and shrubs.

An hour or so passed pleasantly enough then, as the heat grew more intense Vera's mind turned to the garden. There were huge blocks of ice, looking deliciously cool, behind banks of ferns. The air hummed with the noise of electric fans, and yet the atmosphere was heavy and enervating. Supper was a thing of the past, and Vera stood at the head of a flight of marble steps, which led to the garden. She was quite alone. She was looking for Walter, whom she had not seen for some little time. She turned with a smile as someone murmured her name. She saw that it was Ravenspur's friend, Sir James Seton, who was standing by her side.

"So you are all alone," he said. "What are those young men thinking about? It was very different in my day."

Vera smiled somewhat faintly. She had every respect for Sir James. He was kindly disposed enough, but in the eyes of youth he was regarded as something of a bore. There was no help for it when he suggested a turn in the garden.

"Certainly," Vera murmured; "only I don't want to walk far. I have enjoyed my first season in town immensely, but I am beginning to long for the fresh air in the country again."

"Quite right," Sir James agreed; "just the same with me. Why people box themselves up in London during the most beautiful months of the year I can't imagine. They talk about England glorious old England, being a decadent country! A man wants a real stamina to struggle through the three months which we call the season. Some of these men are a perfect marvel to me. Take Ravenspur, for example. That man works as hard as any man in England. He is here, there, and everywhere, and yet he finds plenty of time for this sort of thing, too. If there is anybody I envy it is Ravenspur."

"I am sure you have no need to envy anybody," Vera laughed. "Besides, in many ways you are very like him. Most people see a strong resemblance betwen you two."

Sir James chuckled as if well pleased with the compliment.

ANXIOUS MOMENTS FOR YOUNG MOTHERS

The hot weather months are an anxious time for all mothers, but particularly for young mothers. They are the most fatal months in the year for babies and young children, because of the great prevalence of stomach and bowel troubles. These come almost without warning, and often before the mother realizes that there is danger the little one may be beyond aid. It is the duty of every mother to use all reasonable precautions to ward off summer complaints. For this purpose no other medicine can equal Baby's Own Tablets. An occasional dose will keep the stomach and bowels from offending matter and will ensure the little ones good health. If the trouble comes unexpectedly the Tablets will speedily cure it. Every home, therefore should keep the Tablets on hand always; they may be the means of saving your child's life. They are guaranteed free from opiates and narcotics, and may be given with perfect safety to a new born babe. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TO INCREASE INTEREST IN TEMPLE OF HONOR

The adjourned annual session of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance was held last evening in the Market Building and was well attended. The report of the committee on the state of the order was read and a discussion followed. Though an increase in membership was shown it was agreed that greater efforts should be made for the extension of the order.

It was decided to re-organize the Fairville temple which became defunct some months ago. It was also decided to pay more attention to the junior section and to arouse interest in the order by bringing R. Robertson, a grand officer, to give a series of lectures. Should Mr. Robertson come, a celebration will be arranged, in which all the temples will take part.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS

NICKEL'S BIG SHOW FOR CHILDREN TODAY

The little ones of the city—the school children particularly—look forward to their Saturday afternoons at the Nickel with pleasurable anticipation. It is an established fact that special efforts are put forward to make the programme both instructive and amusing, devoid of startling features, and bright and new. To-day's bill will be no exception and with Brazilian travel views, the picture story of an Indian's faithfulness to a little white friend, the drama The Rag-picker's Daughter and a couple of screamingly funny comedies, the boys and girls will have a whole hour of the most enjoyable entertainment. Mr. Cairns and Miss Wren will both sing.

THE AMATEUR'S PERFORMANCES

Despite the unusually large demand for seats for "A Sailor's Sweetheart," and "Caprice," to be produced by Theo. H. Bird and the St. John Dramatic club in the Opera House on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings of next week, there are still a few good seats downstairs for the Wednesday and Friday evenings, while there are quite a number left in the balcony for all three performances. So far nothing but subscribers' tickets have been sold. The sale to the general public will open on Tuesday morning.

There was a complete rehearsal of "Caprice" last night and "A Sailor's Sweetheart" will be rehearsed in the Keith Assembly Rooms tonight at 7.30. All the new specialties, including The See-Saw Waltz and the Old-fashioned Walk Choruses and topical songs with local hits by Steve Matthews will be given at all the performances.

MISS EMMERSON'S FAREWELL TODAY

Matinee and evening performances in the Opera House today will conclude Miss Mary Emerson's very enjoyable engagement in St. John. Will O' The Wisp will be played at each performance. It is a delightful romantic drama well staged and well played.

THE SILVER KING

Those who have had an opportunity of seeing the final rehearsals of "The Silver King," to be presented on Monday and Tuesday evenings next by the A. O. H. Dramatic Club, are unanimous in the verdict that it is the master effort of that organization. Past productions by this club have been of a very high standard, but "The Silver King" bids fair to excel them. The stage settings and scenic effects are elaborate, some features being used here for the first time.

One point that will commend itself is that there will not be the usual tiresome waits between the acts so common in amateur plays. The performance will be continuous, specialties of a very high order of excellence being introduced between the acts. The cast have been working hard and a performance worthy of generous patronage is assured. Those disappointed on Monday will have another opportunity Tuesday evening, when the play will be repeated. Tickets can now be procured at the box office.

PERJURY CHARGE IN LIQUOR CASE

John J. Davis Gets Himself in Trouble Over Liquor Charge Against the Ottawa Hotel.

Louis Green, proprietor of the Ottawa Hotel, was yesterday fined $100 or thirty days in jail on the charge of selling liquor after hours on Saturday night last. A more serious case arising out of the evidence was the charge of perjury against John Davis, of 16 Mill street.

Davis swore that he had never been in the Ottawa Hotel in his life and he stuck to his story. Policeman Lucas testified that he had seen Davis come out of the Ottawa on Saturday evening and Joseph McDermott, who on Thursday, refused to be sworn, swore that Davis was in the bar when the witness went in about 11.15 o'clock Saturday night. Policeman Scott was with Lucas when Davis is alleged to have come out of the hotel and Davis was remanded until Scott could give evidence. Davis was laughing and seemed amused at the proceedings in court until he had given his evidence, when he seemed very nervous and excited. When brought face to face with the statement that he had committed himself for the serious charge of perjury he broke down utterly and wept in court. He said he had not remembered being in the hotel in his life, but his pleadings were of no avail.

The case against Louis Green was taken up at 2 o'clock. Policeman Lucas told of seeing Joseph McDermott, John Davis and another man coming out of the Ottawa Hotel after 1 o'clock on Saturday night. McDermott and the unknown were under the influence of liquor and Davis tried to get them to stay in the Cheyne House doorway. McDermott used profane language and the witness placed him under arrest. A bottle of gin was found in his hip pocket.

Joseph McDermott, who refused to take the oath on Thursday seemed prepared to give sworn testimony yesterday and made no objection. He gave his evidence in a straightforward manner. He told of having a bottle of gin in his possession on Saturday night. He purchased it in the Ottawa Hotel, in a room off the bar. He went into the Ottawa with a friend about 11.15 Saturday night. Davis, with one or two others was in the bar at the time. The bartender was there and served the witness and his friend. He did not care to tell his friend's name, and this was not pressed for by the prosecution. He was in the bar about half an hour at that time. Davis came out with him.

John J. Davis took the stand and repeated the words of the oath with emphasis. He said he knew Lucas and McDermott. He was never in the Ottawa Hotel in his life. He had heard the evidence of the two witnesses and would contradict them.

"We will stop right here," said Police Clerk Henderson.

Judge Ritchie warned the witness of the danger of his position.

"I will take the responsibility," said Davis.

This closed the case for the prosecution and A. W. Macrae, who appeared for the defence stated that the bartender had the bar opened without the knowledge of Mr. Green.

His Honor found the defendant guilty and imposed the fine told. This is the third conviction secured within a year.

One Harrigan, who had smirched "the name that shame has never been connected with," was brought into court and let go on the recommendation of his employer. He promised to take the pledge for two years.

Joseph McDermott, the witness in the Green case, was let go and told to let rum alone.

Martin Downs, arrested on a warrant for attempted rape, was remanded for one week in order for him to sober up.

Netherwood Girls' Society.

At a meeting of the Old Girls of Netherwood School, Rothesay, on Thursday, the following officers were elected: Miss Jean Ketchum, president; Miss Vera Brown, vice-president; Miss Nora Robinson, treasurer; Miss Gladys Blair, secretary. The members of this year's graduating class, Miss Vera Brown, Long Island (N. Y.); Miss Gladys Blair, St. Stephen; Miss Nora Peters, Gagetown; Miss Nora Robinson, St. John; Miss Lillie Raymond, St. John; Miss Rachel Walker, Hampton, and Miss Muriel Sadlier, St. John, were added to the society.

One Dose

Often a single dose of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral at bedtime will completely control the night coughs of children. It is a strong medicine, a doctor's medicine, entirely free from alcohol. Made only for diseases of the throat, bronchial tubes, and lungs. Full formula on each label.

Ask your doctor to tell you, honestly and frankly, just what he thinks of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Then do as he says.
