THIRTEENTH YEAR. WEDNESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 12 1892. ONE CENT

THREE YEARS IN KINGSTON.

ARTHUR YORKE RECEIVES HIS SENTENCE IN SULLEN SILENCE.

The Scoundrel Who So Brutally Ill-Used His Infant Child as to Cause Its Death Is Let Off With a Light Sentence And Sharp Reprimand—The Horrible Details of the Crime.

Yesterday afternoon the Assize Court filled rapidly as the opening hour drew nigh, as it had become generally known that Arthur Yorke of Sutton would be put upon trial on the charge of murdering his infant child, September 4.

The prisoner is a heavily built man of short stature, and is the possessor of a dull, heavy cast of countenance, expressive of dense and brutish ignorance.

The Crown Prosecutor's version of the crime to the jury was as follows, in brief. The prisoner is charged with taking his child out into the garden on the morning in question and choking and otherwise abusing it to such an extent as to result in its death. He would endeavor to prove his statements by the evidence which would be adduced.

The Damning Evidence.

George M. Thayer, who lives about 100 yards distant from the prisoner's home, was the first witness put on the stand. He stated that on Sept. 3 Mrs. Yorke, with her baby, spent the evening with his wife, the baby appearing hearty and strong. Before he had risen next morning he heard someone pounding on the door, and upon going down Mrs. Yorke made complaint as to the manner in which her husband was ill-using the child. She then left, but was back in five or ten minutes, having her dead baby in her arms and accompanied by the prisoner. As they approached the door she said to her husband, "Arthur, you have killed my baby." They then came into the house and I asked him what he had been doing. He said the child had a fit when in his charge, and before his wife could return it was in the throes of death and he had only time to place it in her arms when it died. The witness saw marks on the dead child's throat. Later on he observed bruises behind the ear, on the hand and also on the back. The baby never had fits to the best of his knowledge.

Henrietta Thayers, wife of the last witness, described the marks on the body and also corroborated his testimony in the other instances; in addition, she stated that the wife had told her of other occasions when Yorke had whipped the baby.

Mrs. Mann testified to the effect that Mrs. Yorke passed her door, "carrying the dead body of her baby, and as she passed, said, "Arthur has killed my little one." Yorke then said, in a menacing tone, "Take care, Lizzie, take care."

She had observed prisoner in his garden, that morning, with the child in his arms. He was standing still looking at it. Suddenly he ran to the gate and looked eagerly up and down the road. Presently his wife came hurrying along, and in an instant her heart-broken cry rang out on the morning air.

Sarah Agnes Thayer was also told the story by the bereaved mother. Yorke standing sullenly by made no effort to offer a denial.

"You Killed the Child!"

Esther Kearns was another witness to meet the couple on the street with their strange burden. The wife exclaimed on seeing her that Yorke had killed the child. The husband retorted: "No, I didn't," but the wife said: "Yes, you did; you whipped it like a big child and choked it." He made no reply to this.

The wife asked Mrs. Kearns afterward not to say anything to get Arthur into trouble. George Bovair saw the prisoner brutally throw the child on the bed one day and heap clothes on top of it. Upon the witness remarking that the child would smother the prisoner said he did not care whether it did or not.

Elizabeth Tarbot, stepmother of Mrs. Yorke, stated that the ill-assorted couple had been married in the early part of August, 1891; that they had never agreed and she had seen the husband take the wife's hands and make her beat her face until her eyes were blacked and the blood ran in a stream from the bruised flesh. She had also seen him shake the helpless babe in a fit of passion and once he had put a plug of tobacco in its mouth to stop its crying, saying that, "Inside of three months I will have the little devil chewing tobacco."

David Tarbot, the father of Mrs. Yorke, said Yorke had no occasion to be jealous of his wife at any time. He had heard Yorke say he would make it warm for the Thayer family if he got off. Drs. Bentley and Pringle and Fabian Blanchard, a medical student, all of Sutton, made the post-mortem examination of the body, but being unaccustomed to making after-death examinations of children, their testimony was very weak, merely locating the bruises. Dr. Noble had examined a lung of the baby and was of the opinion that it had died of smothering.

Dr. Johnson of the city had read the deposition and pronounced death to be the result of asphyxia, indicated by the finding of clotted blood under the plura.

Henry Trolore, magistrate, called at Yorke's house at about 10 a.m. Sunday and observed the marks on the neck of the child.

Speech for the Defence.

Mr. A. E. Swartout, counsel for the defendant, opened his address by stating that the prisoner had not been able to procure counsel to defend him and that Judge MacMahon at the last minute had asked him to conduct the case. He had done it to the best of his ability, though knowing little or nothing of the case.

He ascribed the brutality of the husband to his low, uneducated ideas of amusement and drew attention to the weak evidence offered by the prosecution in the medical testimony brought forward.

Mr. Clute, after consultation with the Judge, asked for a verdict of manslaughter.

In his charge to the jury the Judge clearly defined the difference between murder and manslaughter and charged rather against the prisoner.

Guilty of Manslaughter.

The jury retired at about 6.40 o'clock and the court adjourned until 7.30. In ten minutes the jury were rapping on the door to signify their agreement upon a verdict, but they had to endure their incarceration as best they might until the judge returned. The verdict returned was, "Guilty of manslaughter."

Mr. Clute moved for sentence, but before complying the judge took occasion to administer to the prisoner such a scathing rebuke on his actions, both as husband and father, that ignorant and brutal as he was he flushed and had the grace for a few minutes to look thoroughly abashed. The sentence imposed was three years' imprisonment in the Kingston Penitentiary. The Judge warned Yorke that if on being discharged from Kingston he made any attempt to fulfil his threats he would stand in a far more critical position than he did even now.

Fully 30,000 men and boys were in line, carrying handsome banners and illuminated transparencies, mostly bearing religious symbols. The American flag was conspicuous throughout the whole parade, while the ancient flag of Spain was also visible in the display.

Otter. Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, Minister of Militia, has also promised to attend. The band of the Queen's Own and officers of the local corps will be present.

MERCIER SENT FOR TRIAL.

There Are Three Charges Against Him Of Malfeasance in Office.

QUEBEC, Oct. 10.—Count Mercier was today, by Judge Chaveau, committed to stand his trial before the Court of Queen's Bench in three more cases in which charges of malfeasance in office have been brought against him, as follows: In the case of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway upon a warrant made payable to the order of J. C. Langelier and released by Mr. Mercier over his simple signature, not officially, but for J.C. Langelier. Second, an official check based on this warrant, made payable to the order of J. C. Langelier and endorsed by Mr. Langelier, and by Mr. Mercier himself, afterwards deposited to his own credit for his own personal and private advantage.

The second charge is for appropriating provincial moneys for his own use. In the third indictment His Honor said he would commit the defendants for malfeasance in office for having illegally accepted and received the sum of $301,355 from Mr. Pacaud when he must have known that the sum was part of a subsidy that he himself intended to have voted by the legislature under the pretence of aiding in the construction of the Hereford Railway.

Other misapplications of public moneys form the gravamen of the remaining counts in the indictment.

THE UNDER THE BARN STORY.

The Glenwilliam Villagers Conclude There is Nothing to It.

GEORGETOWN, Ont., Oct. 11.—Mrs. McErney, wife of the missing man, Thomas McErney, of Glenwilliam returned home this afternoon from her father's funeral. She emphatically denies the rumor that the deceased on his death bed said that McErney's body would be found under the barn.

Several of those who attended deceased were interviewed to-day and all stated that the rumor was false. The villagers are now coming to the same conclusion and are looking for the man who first concocted the yarn. No one has thought it worth while to search the barn. The question where is McErney is yet unanswered.

THE TRAGEDY AT NEWBLISS.

THEORIES AS TO THE ACTION OF THE MURDERER.

So Far All the Evidence Against Him Is Circumstantial, But He May Be Convicted Through the Money Found in His Possession When Arrested—Great Excitement Over the Crime.

SMITH'S FALLS, Ont., Oct. 11.—The whole country around here is in a terrible state of excitement over the Lucky tragedy, and crowds of people still continue to visit the ruins of the house and linger over them with a morbid desire to glean something in the way of particulars even more horrible than they are already in possession of. The theory of a double murder and suicide is not accepted by many, and while a great many different stories are being circulated as to the manner in which the parties met their cruel death there is no doubt but that the man now confined in Smith's Falls jail is the guilty party, the slayer of his father, stepmother and sister.

Seeking For Information.

The World correspondent drove to the scene of the affair and interviewed a number of farmers regarding the murder and suicide theory, and from information received it is plain that the prisoner had a standing grudge against the father; that he came down from Toronto on Friday night and walked out to Newbliss, that he hid in the woods until a convenient time arrived and then stole in upon the unsuspecting relatives and killed them, afterwards setting fire to the house to cover his diabolical crime. He is supposed then to have hidden in the woods until nightfall, as he was met on the Smith's Falls road about 8 o'clock by Farmer Poquet, as stated in yesterday's despatches. That the prisoner was at loggerheads with his father is well-known, and being of a surly, revengeful disposition, he no doubt brooded over his wrongs while in confinement, and being released immediately proceeded to put his vicious thoughts into action. He is a strong, sturdy man and it would be no task for him to make away with his parents and sister.

Laid in Wait for His Victims.

It is supposed that he watched the father leave the house in the morning and later the sister. He then entered the house and slew his stepmother and waited for the return of his sister, who was visiting a few rods from the fated house. On her return he would be able to despatch her with ease, and her teeth being found in the yard makes this theory probable. Lastly the aged father met the same fate, and fastening the doors and windows the inhuman monster set fire to the house and secreted himself in the woods until night time. Had the neighbors searched the woods immediately on discovering the fire they undoubtedly would have found him.

Government Officers on the Case.

The inquest, which is called for to-morrow morning, will be filled with interest. The prisoner will be taken from the jail here to the scene of the inquest, and afterwards transferred to Brockville Jail if committed. Chief McGowan is working away on the case vigorously and expects to have some startling information to unfold at the inquest. Detective Greer of Toronto arrived last night and is assisting him on the case. The pair left for the scene of the tragedy this morning to collect evidence and have not yet returned.

Has He a Certain $5 Bill?

It is reported that one Devlin, a cattle buyer of Ottawa, is ready to swear to the identity of a certain $5 bill which he gave to the old man Lucky in payment of some stock, and the money found in the prisoner's pocket will be submitted to him for inspection. This will be an important clue. As it is the finding of a large sum of money on his person is sufficient evidence that he was in the house, because the murdered man reported to be worth a few hundred dollars, and it is not likely the prisoner would have any money on his person when he left the jail with no more than would pay his fare to Smith's Falls. The young man has made no effort as yet to secure counsel. He, of course, will have a very fair show, as if he is convicted at all it will be merely on circumstantial evidence. There are some who are of opinion that the prosecution will be weak in some respects, but circumstances point so strongly to a brutal and inhuman crime being committed by the prisoner that his conviction will be a comparatively easy matter.

This town is filled with newspaper men from Ottawa, Brockville and other adjacent points, and the case is creating as much excitement as did the famous Birchall affair.

DEATH OF PAUL PEEL.

The Brilliant Young Canadian Artist Died in Paris—He Was an Honor to His Country—Sketch of His Career.

Word was received in the city yesterday of the death at Paris at the age of 32 of Paul Peel, the brilliant young Canadian artist, whose work had won him a European reputation.

Paul Peel was a native of London, Ont., and the son of a well-known stonecutter of that city. He spent many years of his life in Paris, France.

The work of Paul Peel was the first done by a Canadian artist that gave Canada continental fame as his birthplace. His name is probably the greatest, as yet, in the annals of Canadian art. He was a Canadian not only by birth but in spirit. He chose to have his first great sale of pictures here in Toronto at probably great financial loss, and for this reason he should be especially honored by his fellow-countrymen.

A review of his work published in The New England Magazine two years ago gives a good account of him.

Said the writer: "He lived during the most important period of his life in Paris, and his work is in most respects as French as his masters. He is principally a figure painter, although he often paints landscapes with figures; and he has accomplished that which no Canadian artist resident in Canada has dared to attempt—absolute command over the plastic lines and tints of the undraped figure. At 30 years of age he is pre-eminently the best artist Canada has yet produced and what he has done is only a promise of still greater things. He has been an artist since early boyhood, having begun his studies while still attending the public school in his native town of London, Ont. At 17 he entered the Philadelphia Academy of Fine Arts and studied there for three years under Eakins. Then he went to England and worked at the Royal Academy, shortly afterwards removing to Paris, where he remained for 10 years, studying under Greome, Boulanger, Lefevere, Doucet and Benjamin Constant, being nearly four years under the tutelage of the latter. A short time ago family affairs brought him to Canada, and he made his visit the occasion of an exhibition of some of his paintings. The collection was probably the finest by one artist ever seen in Canada. It was certainly the best exhibition made by a Canadian artist in his own country. Among the canvases was a magnificent nude study, entitled 'The Venetian Bather,' the composition, color and technique of which were perfect. It possessed all the excellences of the French school, which undoubtedly comprises the masters of the nude, but it had also the delicacy and poetry with which such men as Sir Frederick Leighton and Solomon J. Solomon invest the undraped figure. The picture was exhibited with others in the Paris Salon in 1889 and excited considerable enthusiasm. It was a distinct success, and the success was recorded in London and New York at the time. In the recent exhibition there were also some delightful pictures of French peasant life, in which Peel is particularly happy—painted in Brittany, Normandy and Paris, and in addition to these were several Canadian subjects obtained during flying visits to his native place. In all there were about fifty-seven pictures, some of the most important canvases executed during Peel's residence in Paris. In spite of the protestations of his friends Mr. Peel formed the adventurous resolve of selling off all his productions in Toronto without reserve. The result was as might have been expected. There was a great deal of curiosity and a large attendance at the sale, but the pictures were sacrificed at ridiculous prices. Mr. Peel is doubtless now convinced that he would have been wiser to have auctioned his pictures in Paris. It is hard to convince an artist that all the world does not love art. He possibly thought Canadians had learned to appreciate art during his long absence abroad. He did not know that the only things which are really interesting to Canadians to-day are politics, railroads, real estate, Manitoba wheat and 'having a good time.' In a decade or so it will be different—perhaps."

Mr. Peel's work, "Apres le Bain," gained the gold medal at the last Salon of 1891. The black and white gives no idea of the luminousness and warmth of the picture. The same qualities are seen in his "Tired Cupid," a fair-haired little fellow of about five years old crying behind an easel, from round the corner of which a big-bearded artist is good-naturedly regarding him.

It was while he was working in Constant's atelier that Mr. Peel made his greatest progress; and the fact of his having studied under several masters saved him from the slightest tendency of becoming a mere imitator. The advantage of hearing the judgments of different studios upon contemporary masters made him strike out for himself, and all his work has the stamp of originality without the least suspicion of the merely bizarre. The picture which won for him his greatest fame was suggested to him by one of his own little ones, fresh from the bath, happening to take a pretty pose before the open fire.

Most of his best works are owned in Canada.

UNLUCKY MERCHANTS.

Patterson of Toronto and Foy of Brighton, Both Bankrupt Stock Dealers, Assign—Local Shoe House in Trouble.

Mr. Joseph Patterson, Yonge and Adelaide-streets, has for some years been a dealer in bankrupt stocks of gents' furnishings. Now he is in a state of insolvency himself, having yesterday assigned to Campbell & May.

About a year ago he purchased the bankrupt stock of Macdonald & Chittenden, at the same time moving into their premises, which he has since occupied. Prior to that Mr. Patterson did business in a store a few doors south of Queen, where he was visited by fire.

The direct cause of the trouble is alleged to be the same that has brought a good many merchants to the ground—over-speculation in real estate. The liabilities are estimated at $40,000 and the assets, consisting of stock, mortgages and securities, at about $34,000. This is without the insolvent's equity in real estate. A short time ago he claimed a surplus of $100,000.

A meeting of creditors will be held Friday, 21st inst., at the offices of Campbell & May, 32 Front-street west.

Another Bankrupt Stock Dealer Assigns.

The fates seem against dealers in bankrupt stocks these days, yesterday the assignment being announced of J. J. Foy & Co. of Brighton to Samson, Kennedy & Co.

Mr. Foy has been largely interested in bankrupt stocks for some years. Originally he was a member of the firm of Foy & Mason of Shelburne. From there, after drifting about in sundry towns, he settled in Port Hope. There he entered extensively into business. In March last he moved to Brighton. The cause of the failure is attributed to carrying excessive stocks.

The liabilities of the firm are estimated at $14,000 and assets at $16,000.

Mr. Ash, a merchant tailor of Markham, is a partner in the firm.

An Unprofitable Boot and Shoe Business.

Mrs. Catharine Hardy, dealer in boots and shoes at 665 Queen-street west, assigned yesterday to Campbell & May. Liabilities are placed at $4500. The assets consist of stock, valued at $5000, and a large amount of real estate.

Minor Assignments.

Marriott & Lefevre, lumber, Fort William, have assigned to Sheriff Thompson.

Rutledge & Hammond, drygoods, Fort William, have compromised with their creditors at 70c on the dollar, 45c cash and balance on time, unsecured.

THE ESCAPADES OF MR. WARD

PARIS SEEMS TO HAVE TURNED A TORONTONIAN'S BRAIN.

He Is In Custody at Brussels, Charged With the Abduction of a Minor, the Daughter of a Bourges Merchant—He Is Also Accused of Having Assaulted a Ten-Year-Old Girl.

PARIS, Oct. 11.—The arrest of Ward in Brussels is the great sensation here, where the parties are all well-known.

The double charge against him is brought by a tradesman of Bourges, with whose daughter, aged 16, Ward is said to have eloped.

The father had them followed by detectives and tracked them via Paris to Brussels, where the arrest was made on the charge of abduction of a minor, which is punishable by five years' penal servitude.

The girl, however, declared that she had followed Ward of her own free will, and he thinks that the strong protestations of his sister's husband, Prince Caraman-Chimay, might have secured his release.

But a woman with whom he had been living at the Villa Givandins, near Bourges, and whom he had deserted for the girl, made a grave charge.

She is said to have alleged that Ward had criminally assaulted her 10-year-old daughter, Blanche Herault, and alleges that she can prove the charge by the medical testimony taken at the time.

Ward's friends say that Madame Herault's action is for revenge, because of the loss of her handsome and most generous protector, Ward, who is only 22, and who appears to have lavished money upon her.

Her villa is costly. It was furnished from here; and her dresses, her carriages and her jewels were the sensation of Bourges.

Little is known about her except that she was divorced under sensational circumstances eight years ago. She is described as handsome, but old enough to be Ward's mother.

She alleges that Ward offered her $50,000 for her silence about Blanche. He denies the whole story, saying that when he had made up his mind to leave her she brought out this charge, demanding $50,000.

THE POET'S SIMPLE FUNERAL.

He Hated Hearses and the Remains Were Removed From Aldworth in a Small Cart.

LONDON, Oct. 11.—Lord Tennyson often expressed his aversion to hearses, and today when his body was removed from Aldworth the coffin was carried from the house by old servants and placed in a small cart waiting to receive it. The relations then formed in procession behind the cart and started for Haslemere station. Their journey was a slow one, and the whole distance was made on foot by the mourners. Nothing more simple could have been conceived. As the cortege moved along the men who were met with removed their hats and women bowed their heads until the mournful procession had passed. When Haslemere station was reached the coffin was placed in a special saloon car that was waiting. The mourners then entered and in a few minutes the train started for London. Lady Tennyson, Hallam Tennyson and the other members of Lord Tennyson's family accompanied the body.

Owing to the ignorance of the public as to the time at which the train would arrive only a few persons were gathered in the Waterloo station when the cars rolled in. The coffin was at once removed from the car, and without ostentation of any kind was placed on an ordinary van, and in this homely conveyance was quietly borne to Westminster Abbey, its final resting place.

A large number of persons had gathered about the entrance to the abbey, and it was with difficulty that the policemen detailed for duty there succeeded in forming a passage from the van to St. Faith's Chapel, where the body will remain until the funeral takes place to-morrow.

There was a great crush for admission to the abbey, but only a few privileged persons were permitted to enter.

Canon Duckworth and others of the clergy attached to Westminster Abbey received the mourners and gave directions for the arrangement of the coffin.

Mrs. Hallam Tennyson placed a handsome floral wreath on the coffin.

Canon Duckworth then offered a brief prayer and the simple ceremony was ended.

ANTWERP, Oct. 11.—A few cases of cholera have occurred the past few days in the poor quarter of the city in the Rue Kronenberg, one of the streets near the water front. The timely arrival of the police prevented serious disorder.

MRS. HARRISON SINKING.

Yielding to the Disease Which Has Assailed Her.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—Mrs. Harrison's condition appears to be yielding to the effects of the disease from which she is suffering, and she is gradually growing weaker. The nourishment, consisting of raw eggs and beef tea, which has been so important an element in keeping up her strength, is now taken in smaller quantities. She rests quietly as a rule and sleeps most of the time, but awakes exhausted instead of refreshed. The cough, which has distressed her at intervals, has ceased, but this is regarded as an unfavorable symptom. The disease is progressing more rapidly and the left lung is now involved.

To-night Mrs. Harrison is fairly comfortable, notwithstanding the unfavorable conditions.
