POETRY.

HOME.

Where burns the loved hearth brightest,
Cheering the social breast?
Where beats the fond heart lightest,
Its humble hopes possessed?
Where is the smile of sadness,
Or meek-eyed patience born,
Worth more than those of gladness
Which mirth's bright cheek adorn?
Pleasure is marked by fleetness
To those who ever roam,
While grief itself has sweetness
At Home dear Home!

They blend the ties that strengthen
Our hearts in hours of grief,
The silver links that lengthen
Joys visits, when most brief;
Their eyes in splendour
Are vocal to the heart,
And glances, gay and tender,
Fresh eloquence impart;
Then dost thou sigh for pleasure?
Oh do not wildly roam!
But seek the hidden treasure
At Home, dear Home.

Does pure religion charm thee
Far more than aught below?
Wouldst thou that she should arm thee
Against the hour of woe?
Think not she dwelleth only
In temples made for prayer;
For Home itself is lonely
Unless their smiles be there.
The devotees may falter,
The bigot blindly roam;
If worshipless her altar
At Home, dear Home!

Love over it presideth,
With meek and watchful eye
Its daily service guideth,
And shows its perfect law;
If there thy faith shall fail thee,
If there no shrine be found,
What can thy prayers avail thee,
With kneeling crowds around?
Go leave thy gift unoffered
Beneath religious dome,
And be her first fruits proffered
At Home, dear Home!

VARIETY.

STRONG TEA PUNCH.—Rev. John Abbot, the sailor preacher, relates the following good story of one of his converts to temperance:—

Mr. Johnston, at the close of a cold-water lecture, intimated that he must sign the pledge in his own way, which he did in these words.

"I, William Johnson, pledge myself to drink no more intoxicating drinks for one year."

Some thought he would not stick three days others allowed him a week, and a few others gave him two weeks; but the landlord knew him best and said he was good stuff, but at the end of the year Bill would be a good soaker.

Before the year was quite gone, Mr. Johnson was asked by Mr. Abbott—

"Bill, ain't you going to resume the pledge?"

"Well, I don,t know, Jack, but what I have pretty well for so far. Will you let me sign it again my own way?"

"yes, any way that you will not drink rum."

He writes:

"I William Johnson, sign this pledge for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, and it living at the end of that time, I intend to make out a lease for life."

A day or two after, Johnson went to see his old landlord, who eyed him as a hawk does a chicken

"O landlord!" whined Bill, accompanied by sundry contortions of the body, as if enduring the most excruciating torment, "I have such a lump on my side."

"That's because you have stopped drinking; you won't live two years longer at this rate."

"If I commence drinking, will the lump go away"

"Yes. If you don't, you'll have a lump on the other side."

"Do you think so, landlord?"

"I know it: you'll have them on your arms, back, breast, and head, you will be covered all w[illegible]."

"Well, may be I will," said Bill.

"Come, Bill," said the landlord, "let's drink together;" at the same time pouring the red stuff from the decanter into the glass, gug, gug, gug.

"Said Johnson, "I can't, for I've signed the pledge again."

"You ain't though! you are a fool!"

"Yes that old sailor coaxed so hard I could not get off."

"I wish the old rascal was in Guinea.

Well how long do you go this time?"

"For nine hundred and ninety-nine years."

"You won't live a year."

"Well, if I drink, are you sure the lump on my side will go away?,,

"Yes,,

"Well, I guess I won't drink; here's the lump continued Bill, holding up something with a hundred dollars in it ,, and you say I'll have more such lumps and that's what I want.

TELL ME AGAIN.—A poor Caffre had heard a missionary speak of "the wrath to come," thought he did not know the meaning of it. He came into the colony, was brought to the missionary, explained his anguish, and asked what he must do.

Mr. Hood preached to him the Saviour; he listened with eagerness, and stood trembling and said, "Sir I am old and stupid; tell me again." And being told again, the tears rolled down the sable cheek of this man of noble and athletic frame, and he confessed his wonder at the love of God and the compassion of the Saviour.

He resolved to come and live near the missionary, that he might hear again the glad tidings. The little space in the village was, however, already occupied, and as he had acquired property, and that property was cattle, there would be no room to graze them.

He told his difficulty to the missionary, and added, "I am a Caffre, and I love my cattle; but I'll part with the last end I have if that stands in the way of coming to hear the word!" He found the pearl of great price, and he would part with all he had to procure it. The missionary arranged matters for him and he now resides on the spot, a consistent, devoted Christian Moravian.

DIDN'T BELIEVE IT.—At the House of Correction in New Bedford, recently, an Irish woman after being placed in her cell, commenced praying, and continued her devotions without cessation for some two hours. In the morning she woke up with a violent toothache, which she charged to the account of her prayers. "Och," said she, "and sure I'll never pray again, by the holy St. Patrick, if this is the way I am to be served!" We are afraid that she will not be a very earnest praying woman in the future, until she is enlightened upon the subject.

Why is a blush like a little girl? Because it becomes a woman!"

The woman who never interfered with her husband's affairs is in town. She is unmarried

Why are postage stamps like lazy school boys? Because you have to lick their backs to make them stick to their letters.

"Tommy, my son," said a fond mother, on her return from a journey, "have you said your prayers night and morning?"—"Yes," was the reply: "that is, every night; but any smart boy can take care of himself in the day time."

A servant asked her mistress whether she could oblige her by going out on a particular afternoon, as she was going to have a party of friends, and wanted the loan of the drawing-room.
