MAY TALK UNDER SEAS

London, Sept. 23.—Talking through the water from one ship to another has become possible by means of an improved wireless telephone, invented by A. W. Sharman, with which he expects to be able to replace the ordinary bell signals.

Bells sounded under the sea are at present in use on all large liners, the sounds being picked up on other vessels by means of a special form of telephone.

The wireless telephone with which people will talk through the sea is quite different from the ordinary wireless telegraph, which transmits signals through the water.

Far simpler and less costly, and requiring no skill to operate, Mr. Sharman's telephone can be fitted up in any vessel, however small, at the cost of a few pounds, and provides a means of conversation by wireless.

In a fog a ship fitted with the Sharman wireless telephone, could hear the approach of other vessels, as the sound given out by a small electric bell or other signalling device on one ship would be detected in the telephone on the other.

After flashing a signal back through the water, conversation could at once be established between the two vessels.

A ship could speak with a port, or lightship, or lighthouse, in just the same way, and submarines could keep up a continuous conversation with each other and the battleship to which they were attached.

Asked over what distances he could talk with the wireless telephone, Mr. Sharman told the Daily Mirror that he was at present limited to a few miles, but, with the aid of a microphone for talking into, he hoped to be able to speak through the sea for twenty miles.
