PROFESSOR PAUL.

The Story of a Life's Love.

(By Stuart Livingston, Barrister, Hamilton.)

Around it were the broad fields bathed in the rich yellow light of the afternoon sun, and winding sinuously downward from its doors I could trace the little canal which had been cut through the shallow waters of the inlet to give access to the bay.

Many a time I had roamed through those wide fields, and many a time I had glided over the quiet waters of that little inlet. Again I felt the yellow dust of the lilies blown softly against my cheek, and heard the sighing of the slender rushes as they bent low beneath the boat. Again I became friends of the wild roses, the tall waving grasses, and the limpid little stream that slips noiselessly through them almost hidden from sight. Ah, yes, it was a very gentle stream, and so cool beneath the shadow of the overhanging trees. Yes, the trees shaded it well. It was always cool. I remember—what was it I was thinking of? Of—of some stream. Yes, I think it was a stream. Well, I remember—but I remembered no more, and I think it must have been at this juncture that my musings slowly dissolved themselves into dreams, and without knowing it I quietly fell asleep.

IX.

When I awoke it was with a start. I must have been asleep some time, for I found myself shivering. The room was very cold and dark, the fire having burned itself out during my sleep until nothing remained except a few smouldering embers. I had been dreaming again of that ghastly skeleton, with the awful monotone of "Dust and ashes." It had again stood in the tall case, and grinned at me with its hollow jaws. It had gazed hideously into my face as it nodded its head with the same awful regularity against the glass, and muttered, "Dust and ashes, dust and ashes, dust and ashes."

It was a dull rapping that had awakened me. What could have caused it? There must have been some external noise to produce the one in my dream. I sat still and listened intently. Yes, there it was again; I had not been deceived. What could it be? I revolved the question rapidly in my mind. It growing more distinct each moment. Suddenly I remembered. Why of course it was Professor Paul coming for me.

As I reached this conclusion, I certainly felt an unmistakable feeling of relief, but it was short lived, for with the next thought I remembered that the dawn must be fast approaching.

At this moment Professor Paul opened the door and entered. He was carrying a lighted candle in one hand, and with the other shielded the little flame from the draft of air which the closing door created. The light was thus thrown upon his face, and I could see at a glance that it was very pale.

He said nothing, but after placing the candle down upon the table proceeded at once to the cupboard that stood at the other side of the room, and when he returned he was carrying a loaf of bread, some butter and a bottle of wine. He laid these carefully upon the table, and then drawing up a chair sat down and began to cut up the bread in thin slices, which he buttered.

When he had finished he arose, and again going to the cupboard he returned this time with a small basket, a wine glass, and some table napkins. He placed the basket also upon the table, then covered the bottom with one of the napkins, at the same time allowing the ends to come well up over the sides. After doing this he laid the bottle and the glass in the bottom of the basket, and having placed the bread in around them, he folded in the ends of the napkin, and laid a second napkin over the top.

All this had been done without a word being spoken, but as he completed it he turned to me and said:

"You see, my friend, immediately after she becomes animate it will be necessary to give her some nourishment."

I made no reply, and after looking at his watch, he continued:

"Come, my friend, we must hurry, it will be dawn in 36 minutes."

His voice was very weak, and trembled as he spoke. He took both the basket and candle himself, and after I had opened the door starting upstairs telling me to follow.

He hesitated three or four times in the ascent, apparently to regain his breath, but it was not long before we arrived at the third story, and I found myself standing before a closed door.

Professor Paul now whispered to me to take off my shoes, he at the same time removing his own, and then taking up the basket he carefully extinguished the light. After this he drew the door open far enough to allow us to enter, and we passed in together.

I found myself still enveloped in total darkness, but I at once became aware of a low humming, or rather buzzing, sound, not unlike that made by the works of a clock when the pendulum is broken. It seemed to disturb Professor Paul in some way, for muttering something to himself, he hurriedly left my side, and in a moment afterwards the noise ceased.

When he returned I could tell from his manner that an occurrence beyond the ordinary had taken place. He seemed to have been wholly unnerved, as he leaned against the door I could hear he was breathing heavily.

As soon as he had recovered sufficient command of himself, he said in a hoarse whisper:

"How long did I remained down stairs?" and then added, 'Be very careful how you answer for much depends upon it."

I thought a moment, and then I replied:

"I should not say longer than six or seven minutes at the outside, and that would include the time you spent coming down and going up again as well."

My answer appeared greatly to relieve him.

Butter vs. Lard.

To the Editor of the ADVERTISER:

As it takes ten pounds of milk to make one pound of cheese, and 25 pounds of milk to make one pound of butter—in other words five pounds of cheese are worth only two pounds of butter—it will be seen that butter has a far greater equivalent value so far as relative strength as regards milk required is concerned. But how much greater is butter in relative value when we consider that there are 50 pounds of butter consumed and exported to every pound of cheese as between Canada and the United States. Now, as the Governor-General, Lord Stanley, in a recent speech pointed out that it costs no more to export a pound of good than a pound of bad butter, why is it, in the face of results that must inevitably follow, that there is so large a quantity of bad butter exported from Canada? The reason is plain to even the casual observer, viz., there is not a sufficiently rigid inspection of the article butter, because not manufactured by so responsible corporations as cheese factories, etc. The cheese that leaves Canada is a credit to the country, but what about the butter that is consumed in Canada, as well as exported from it? Why, Mr. Editor, butter is no name for it in nine cases out of ten. It is a conglomeration of tallow, salt, ossified cream and carrot gratings, when it has any complexion at all! In fact, it is what one distinguished English lady (Hazelip) termed it, "salt buttered," not "butter salted."

I, Mr. Editor, having served 3½ years in inspecting and buying butter and cheese in Kent county, England, and, having for a number of years been connected with the firm of Richardson & Clipperton, the late noted cheese buyers of Western Ontario, do submit that instead of Prof. Robertson devoting so much attention to the cheese department of the dairy interests, he should, as a matter of justice, take some pains at least to prevent the sale or export of such "stuff," as consumers are obliged to pay from 22 to 25 cents per pound for an article that for wagon grease would not command 8 cents per pound when castor oil is far cheaper and more serviceable. It is high time, Mr. Editor, that the people of this country, who pay "the piper" in every instance, should have a butter inspector whose duties should be strictly confined to only the butter department of the dairy.

The consumers of this country demand, contract and pay for pure, palatable butter, and why should they not have it? If I am appointed as the inspector I shall do my best and my very best to meet their wishes. BENJAMIN GOARLEY,

Farmer, 2nd con., London Township.

IMPORTANT!

Remarkable Restoration to Health of Well Known Canadians whose Cases were Given up as incurable.

From the few of the hundreds of letters we have received from those who have been restored to health and strength by the use of that wonderful discovery, Paine's Celery Compound, we make a few extracts. We hope that the thousands of Canadian men and women who are suffering from nervous and wasting diseases, will profit by these true and plain statements of facts.

D. S. Davidson, of Montreal, suffered for years with nervous dyspepsia, pain in his back, and sleeplessness. He tried doctors without relief, was losing flesh rapidly, and had about given up heart when he commenced the use of Paine's Celery Compound. "Now," he says, "I am a new man. I sleep well and my food does not hurt me."

Mr. Jas. Johnson, 302 St. Charles Borromee Street, Montreal, was weak and nervous, had no appetite, and could not rest at night. His nerves were soothed and strengthened by Paine's Celery Compound, and he soon became well and strong.

Annie Gourley, of River Beaudette, P. Q., found the Compound a certain cure for weakness, and now feels as well as she ever did.

A customer of Harrison Bros., druggist, Hamilton, Ont., told them that he was entirely cured of nervous weakness by the use of two bottles of the Compound, after everything else has failed.

The little child of Mrs. G. E. Meredith, 76 D'Arcy St., Toronto, was cured of St. Vitus' Dance by Paine's Celery Compound.
