RATHENAU FACES TREMENDOUS PROBLEMS IN RECONSTRUCTION OF WAR-TORN GERMAN EMPIRE

BERLIN, Sept. 8.—Will Dr. Walter Rathenau take vigorous hold of the reconstruction the German people have agreed to carry out, finding practical ways to do it, while at the same time keeping German industry intact, or will he lose himself in vague formulas and fade into the background with a host of other so-called experts who have pretended to "pull Germany through" in the last two years?

This is the question German business men are asking themselves at the same time that they have given Dr. Rathenau an assurance of their confidence. They modify this, however, by a condition—as long as he keeps on the track.

Hansa-Bund Is Hostile.

Only the Hansa-Bund, an organization comprising middle-sized business, has declared open hostilities to Dr. Rathenau, and this for reasons we will mention later on. Big industries, including the Siemens and Stinnes interests, rivals and hostile to the General Electric Company, of which Rathenau is the head, has declared itself ready to give Dr. Rathenau a chance to organize the industrial machinery of Germany.

The mere fact that Dr. Rathenau is attacked hotly and defended would be enough to indicate that he is a personality. He is a man of ideas, the father of the so-called "plan-industrial organization." The same as Taylor, he is an enemy of waste motion, but is more active in eliminating it between industries, making the country the industrial unit, than he is in systematizing any particular factory.

Well Known to Public.

Dr. Rathenau does not come for the first time before the public. I remember calling upon him shortly after the armistice and telling him that the Belgians had accused him of suggesting a plan for the systematic despoliation of their industries. Dr. Rathenau was very indignant over the report. Pushing a button, he summoned a secretary, who appeared shortly after with a pile of books which Dr. Rathenau had written. "These are all I have written, and there is not one word in them which would indicate I ever have given grounds for such a rumor," Dr. Rathenau declared.

Dr. Rathenau imagined he was convincing me by cumulative evidence. If weight could have done it this pile of books would have been amply sufficient. Possibly he simply produced these books to relieve his feeling. At any rate they indicated an accomplishment along lines tending toward a more rational organization of economic society.

Played Big Part in War.

Dr. Rathenau has ideas and he has dared to try them out. In his own works, however, he is restricted by his board of directors, who suspect his theories as "new fangled." At the beginning of the war he was put at the head of the war industries board. His first task was to offset the effects of the British blockade by organizing a national control of raw materials and foodstuffs.

Before the end of the war this bureau had become almost as important a centre of German resistance to the tightening ring outside as the general staff and almost as powerful. When the revolution same Dr. Rathenau swam in a ferment of new ideas and problems. He was prepared—for ample compensation—to consider schemes for turning over the ownership of his own industry to the workers. He went to Munich during the Bolshevikl uprising on the invitation of one of the "Red" ministers to study nationalization of industry there. He even went with a plan in his pocket, he tells me. But it was one which they did not adopt, he hastily added when telling me of his crusade later.

Develops New Ideas.

The German revolution proved a flash in the pan, but Dr. Rathenau did not stop thinking and devising new industrial methods. The movement for nationalization of coal mines for the following two years gave him a welcome opening. It had become the slogan of the labor parties and for a time seemed the only way to re-establish social peace in Germany.

The Government appointed a board to study various nationalization schemes. Dr. Rathenau was one of the members, took a leadership in the negotiations, and finally proposed a compromise between the full socialization demanded by the workers and the untouched private ownership supported by the Stinnes industrial group. In Dr. Rathenau's scheme, after some 15 years' of progressive indemnification, the ownership would pass to the nation. Such a program would eliminate profits and kill private initiative, hostile owners replied, at the same time branding Dr. Rathenau as a fantastic radical.

Ideas Make Enemies.

But they needed only to look at the General Electric Company to be reassured that Dr. Rathenau still is very able to distinguish between his theory and actual practice, and has not exactly socialized the electrical trust of which he is the head.

Dr. Rathenau has another idea which made him enemies in small business circles throughout Germany. His Taylorization or "industrial planning" scheme was intended to eliminate needless duplication and waste motion. If anything characterizes small business in Germany—and nearly everywhere else for that matter—it is exactly this.

Instead of four cigars stores to the block, as is the case today, Dr. Rathenau would have, for example, one to every two blocks. Starting with this there was no reason why Dr. Rathenau should not suggest the elimination of about three-fourths of the cafes, about half the stationery stores, and, if he looked toward the Wilhelmstrasse, why not close up about half the Government offices? This was a direct menace from Dr. Rathenau which an organization like the Hansa-Bund, representing among others these smaller interests, did not ignore.

Big Man Was Needed.

When big industry heard that Chancellor Wirth was considering Dr. Rathenau for a portfolio there were hasty consultations. The political situation was a critical one and demanded someone capable of energetic action. Someone of Dr. Rathenau's calibre was needed to come forward and show the Allies that the Germans are ready to make sufficient payments to avoid application of further sanctions.

But Dr. Rathenau as minister of industry! Some manufacturers shuddered. The representatives of Stinnes and of Krupps made it clear to the Government that in this capacity Dr. Rathenau would have to face the opposition of a united industry. But they had no objection to his appointment to the post of minister of reconstruction. This indeed is the most difficult and thankless post in the empire. They reasoned that Dr. Rathenau would have enough troubles meeting demands from outside to not have time to concern himself with large scale industrial planning nearer home.

Feels Criticism Keenly.

Dr. Rathenau is sensitive of criticism and himself took the first step to assure the national economic parliament that he does not intend to try out any of his set ideas for the present. Indeed, he has been most careful to avoid outlining any program of reparations or of industrial reconstruction. The immediate aspect of reparations is one of detail, replacing a chimney here and a house there. It is, in short, one of meeting specific French demands for reparations.

Dr. Rathenau is perhaps the man best adapted for a post of reparations and of reconstruction in Central Europe today. If anything is needed to bring order back into Europe today it is not only men of practical business experience but economists of broad vision as well; men who can sufficiently detach themselves from their own private interests to stride over the petty competition in which Europe wallows.

Rathenau combines these qualities. He has made it clear that he does not propose to try to carry out abstract theories. He also has promised to utilize the fullest collaboration of German industry. He has started from the right end in that he is meeting the immediate problems before trying to generalize, and is not tying up his reconstruction in bureaucratic red tape. He works in close accord with the national economic parliament and directly with the German and French manufacturers.

HOW WALL STREET, FINANCIAL CENTER, GOT ITS NAME.

If there had not been war between Holland and England there is no telling what would have been the name of Wall Street. The financial center of America might have borne any other name and have been just as powerful as it is.

The wall that gave to it its name was put up by Peter Stuyvesant. The old peg-legged autocrat had his own intelligence service and he became convinced that the New England and Connecticut colonies were going to attack him. His town north of the fort was unprotected, and he threw a wooden wall from the east to the North rivers. It was built of logs that were used as palisades with the upper end spiked.

Stuyvesant's information was correct, because Connecticut was very anxious to go to war and had become satisfied Indian outrages were being instigated by the Dutch. There was a meeting at Fairfield, near Bridgeport, where men were pledged for the attack on the Dutch. Massachusetts held off, and the next year Holland and England made peace.

But the old wooden wall stood for a half century and cramped the growth of the town. There was a ditch alongside it, and at night the gate was closed and bolted and guarded.

THE "REIGN" OF PEACE.

John Bull: "I think it's coming, Pat; I felt a few drops on my hand."
Pat: "That's right, John. An' shu re how welcome it would be!"

GERMAN MARKS ARE LOWEST SINCE WAR

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—German marks were at their lowest quotation since the war in the local foreign exchange market today. By noon time they had dropped to 1.005 cents. Shortly after the opening they had touched the previous low record of 1.01, made on Jan. 28, 1920.

MAY CHANGE SEAT.

GENEVA, Sept. 8.—The question of changing the seat of the League of Nations was brought up this afternoon in the financial committee of the assembly. Delegates alleged that the cost of holding the sessions here was excessive. Transfer of the seat to Fontainebleau, Turin, Brussels and Vienna was discussed. The Swiss delegates protested, but several of the other members strongly supported the suggestion.

PLAN CO-OPERATIVE ACTION.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 8.—An attempt to bring about co-operative political action of the farmer and labor parties in Selkirk constituency for the federal election is being made. Labor men speak of the possibility of an understanding with the farmers for choosing a joint candidate.

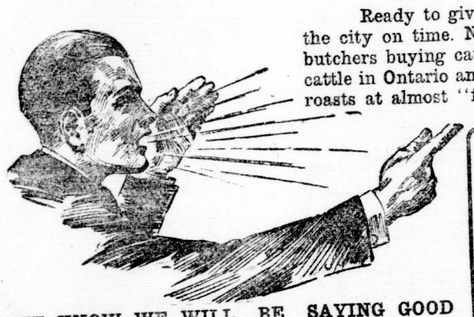
ALL READY FOR THE FAIR

Ready to give you the choicest of beef. Ready to give you prompt and courteous service. Ready to deliver to any part of the city on time. Now is the time to test this store's claim of quality and service. We are practically the only London butchers buying cattle "on the hoof." What does this mean to you? It means that we can pick and choose from the choicest cattle in Ontario and not have to depend on what outside packers care to send us. In this way you are assured of tender, juicy roasts at almost "farmer-to-you" prices.



WE KNOW WE WILL BE SAYING GOOD MORNING TO YOU TO-MORROW.
