LOANTAKA, AT 25 TO 1.

THE SUBURBAN WON BY AN OUTSIDER.

The Betting Public Loses a Mint of Money—How the Great Stake Race Was Won and Lost.

NEW YORK, June 16.—The Suburban handicap has almost since its inception been a race of surprises, but the result of the Suburban of 1891 easily takes the lead.

The winner, Loantaka; is a black horse 5 years old, who went to the post in a field of 10 with 26 to 1 against him, the popular idols, Tenny and Tea Tray, carrying more than $150,000 for the public, being ignominiously beaten.

Loantaka is the property of Dave McCown, was bought by him from Mrs. Lorillard for $575 when 2 years old.

McCown realized the dream of a lifetime at 4.30 o'clock this afternoon, when, in the presence of 30,000 persons, his black whirlwind flashed past the winning post three parts of a length before Major Domo, winner of one of the greatest handicaps of the year.

No race has ever been run in this city before a more brilliant assembly. It was a speaking illustration of the popularity of racing on the highest plane.

After the first three races had been decided, the Suburban candidates paraded past the grand stand in Indian file, eliciting a storm of applause. As they went to the post Tea Tray was second choice at 3 to 1, but beyond him there was a very long price against anything to be named. The great bulk of the money went on Tenny, but almost as much poured in on Tea Tray for a place, the chestnut horse being supported to save the straight bets on the favorite. Major Domo and Banquet were next in favor at 15 to 1, while 20 to 1 could be had against Riley and Cassius. It was 25 to 1 on Loantaka and 30 to 1 each against Fitzjames and Demuth. Isaac Lewis was the rank outsider at 80 to 1.

Positions were quickly assigned, Isaac Lewis drawing the rail, while Major Domo was on the outside. Tenny and Tea Tray were in the centre. A momentary skirmish and half a dozen breakaways, Major Domo in the van. All move together, and the crimson flag whisked the air as the quick eye of the starter took in the field and saw that none were lagging, and the Suburban of 1891 was begun.

Cassius, Major Domo and Banquet were the quickest to move, but the others were thundering at their heels, Tenny the slowest to get under way. Down the track came Cassius, Major Domo and Fitzjames in the van, and Tea Tray the prominent one of the others. Opposite the stand the giant Major Domo came to the front with powerful strides, closely pressed by Cassius, Tea Tray, Banquet and Demuth, Tenny and Loantaka bring up the rear.

Around the lower turn Taral attempted to repeat his last year's tactics by taking the lead with Cassius, but the son of Longfellow could not escape from Major Domo, who clung to him tenaciously and took stride for stride. Demuth, followed by Banquet, set sail for the leaders, and when straightened out for the run up the long backstretch there was not much to choose between Major Domo, Cassius and Demuth, who were two lengths in front of Banquet, a little distance before Fitzjames, Isaac Lewis, Loantaka and Tenny, Tea Tray last, and getting the whip at every bound with all the vigor the Snapper possessed. Loantaka was in a pocket, Tenny was not gaining and Tea Tray was sulking, and the crowd shouted.

"Why, the favorites won't be in it."

One glance at the procession was convincing proof of the assertion. There was a great gap between the flying leaders and the laggards. Murphy was interfered with a trifle in the middle of the backstretch, and, taking Tenny back, he had to go around his field. He sat down and rode hard, passing Loantaka, Isaac Lewis, Riley and Fitzjames in quick succession.

Major Domo soon settled Cassius and Demuth, and opposite the old Dwyer stables he led the field by half a length, Demuth second, a length before Cassius, who was two before Banquet. Tenny was the most prominent of the others, but he did not appear to be gaining.

Half around the upper turn and the throng shouted in consternation, "Tenny's beaten, Murphy's whipping."

And so he was; the cruel lash fell again and again on the quivering flanks of the favorite. But, struggle as he might, it was evident that he must be defeated. Loantaka, who had been in a pocket all the way up the back stretch, got through on the turn, and Bergen, threading his way through the field, passed Tenny.

As the 10 struggling horses swung for the homestretch, Major Domo was half a length before Demuth, who was tiring fast. Cassius third, three lengths away with Fitzjames at his saddles' skirts. Loantaka headed the ruck, and the cry of surprise "Major Domo wins" was still trembling on the air, when Bergen shot up on the outside with the black horse, riding like a demon.

Bergen seemed possessed of some superhuman power, and appeared to lift Loantaka with the power of knees and hands. Opposite the grand stand Major Domo still retained slight advantage, Loantaka, Cassius and Fitzjames on almost even terms, and the others soundly beaten.

Thirty thousand throats were stretched in a mighty shout that swelled into a deafening roar as four horses and their riders fought it out in that final 50 yards. Loantaka's speed was startling, and although the others struggled to the last, the black horse drew out and won by three-quarters of a length from Major Domo, who was as far before Cassius, Cassius was but half a length before Fitzjames.

As soon as the finishing line was passed there was a great outburst. The favorite had been beaten and more than $100,000 had been left in the ring with the bookmakers.

The second favorite was also beaten, and thousands and thousands of dollars lay in the strong boxes of the bookmakers.

In the moment of excitement, when the four horses were fighting to the death, the people were carried away, and they forgot about their losses. But when everything was over, and the ten tired warriors came trooping back to the judges' stand they were keenly alive to the situation. Many a man had lost his all, it being almost a foregone conclusion that Tenny would win and Tea Tray would be second.

MURDERER SCHEELE.

HOW HE PASSED HIS LAST NIGHT ON EARTH.

He Laughs With the Guards, Plays Cards, Smokes and Drinks Beer in a Most Unconcerned Manner—He Says he is Sorry But he Will be Forgiven.

BY TELEGRAPH TO THE GAZETTE.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., June 18.—Jacob Scheele, the condemned murderer, spent his last night on earth apparently as unconcerned of his approaching doom as he had shown weeks before and from his general appearance and actions during the night one would never for a moment suspect he stood so near eternity.

He talked and laughed with the guards and spent the greater portion of his time playing his favorite game of cards, "Pinocle." His spiritual adviser, the Rev. Mr. Warner, remained with him an hour during the evening.

At 1.30 the condemned man finished playing cards. He smoked, drank some beer and remained up until 2.30 when he sought his couch and 20 minutes later was in a deep slumber in which he remained until after daylight. Scheele said to one of the guards last night, he was sorry for what he had done, but was sure God would forgive him because of his repentance.

Scheele arose at 8 o'clock and ate a hearty breakfast. He was cool and collected and conversed calmly with his spiritual adviser who remained with him until 10, and the procession to the gallows was formed at 10.30.

The condemned man mounted the steps without hesitation, the noose was adjusted about his neck and the trap sprung at 10.36. He died without a struggle.

"The Deluge."
[Montreal Star.]

The amount of blundering that the Conservative party has managed to accomplish in the few weeks since its great leader left it, is something astonishing. The funeral is scarcely over before the forces which during the whole of his public life it was his object to subdue or turn to the advantage of his party are threatening destruction to that party. There was not the slightest reason why the appointment of a successor to Sir John Macdonald should stir up sectarian strife in the country. To allow Sir John Thompson to be put forward for a few days as the coming man, and then permit him to be thrust back again on account of his religion, was a piece of phenomenal stupidity on the part of the Conservatives. That it would have been unwise for Sir Hector Langevin to attempt to form a ministry under existing circumstances is true, but was there any good reason why Sir John Macdonald's old and faithful lieutenant should have been passed over in such a way as to convey the impression that his party had pre-judged the case against him, and condemned him before there was a tittle of evidence against him? The end of all this perilous shilly-shallying is the selection of a leader who evidently has the greatest difficulty in forming a ministry, which will hold together long enough to get the estimates passed and Parliament prorogued, so as to give the party time to collect its scattered wits.

"Apres moi le deluge," Sir John used to say, or other people used to say for him, but he could not have imagined it would come so soon. A strong man is wanted at the head of the Conservative party today, a man whose leadership would be acknowledged and respected by all sections of the party, and they have chosen a man absolutely without a personal following without a vote or a voice in the House of Commons, without influence in the country. The Conservative members of Parliament do not seem to realize what the loss of Sir John Macdonald means to the party. It means that unless they have a man as patriotic, as strong, as popular, to take his place at the Privy Council table and in the House of Commons, they have got to change their political methods most radically. Much was forgiven to Sir John Macdonald that will not be tolerated in Mr. John J. C. Abbott or anybody else less patriotic, less unselfish, or with less claim upon the gratitude and forbearance of the country than Sir John Macdonald. We are not alarmed for the future of the Dominion, we have too much confidence in the country and its people for that, but we do not believe the Hon. J. J. C. Abbott s able to extricate it.

A LITTLE ROMANCE.

A Scene, a Circus, Pyrotechnics, Skyrockets, Blue Lights and Heaven Knows What.

The story is short but very interesting, says the New York Herald. A couple were living happily in New York when word came from Germany that a relative had died and left the wife eighty thousand marks or more. The husband, armed with power of attorney, crossed the briny and collected the goodly sum.

The wife next heard that the husband had been shipwrecked off the coast of Spain, had been rescued, but had shortly afterward died. The informant wrote that his last pathetic words were of her. "Tell her," he said, "that I love her and that we shall meet again in heaven."

So she donned the widow's weeds. Instead of meeting her husband in heaven, however, she met him one fine afternoon on Broadway. And hanging on his arm was the radient Spanish maiden who had caused the shipwreck story.

Well, there was a scene, a circus, pyrotechnics, skyrockets, blue lights, and heaven knows what. The women grew red and the man turned pale. Before he gets through he will probably find that the fellow who has two wives travels to bliss on a very rough corduroy road.

SLAVIN WHIPS KILRAIN.

THE AUSTRALIAN POUNDS JAKE'S RIBS.

Kilrain Knocked Out in the Ninth Round—Dissatisfaction at the Referee's Decision.

HOBOKEN, N. J., June 16.—The long discussed and much looked forward to boxing contest between Jake Kilrain, of Baltimore, and Frank Slavin, of Australia, for a $10,000 purse, offered by the Granite association, took place here to-night at the club house of the Granite association. Slavin won. Muldoon, Mike Cleary, and Dan. Murphy, of Boston, were Kilrain's seconds, and Slavin was attended to by Charley Mitchell, Ed. Stoddard, and Pony Moore. The gloves were four ounce red leather mittens. Slavin and Kilrain shook hands at 11.20 and then withdrew to their corners. Time was called a moment or so later. In the first round Slavin assumed the offensive with [illegible] neither struck a blow. Then Kilrain led with his right, and Slavin countered neatly. A clinch followed during which Slavin commenced a terrible right-handed pounding of Kilrain's ribs just below the heart. Kilrain, though weakened, made a grand rally and gave Slavin right and left more than he took. The round closed in favor of Kilrain.

In the second round the men clinched and the Australian again pounded away at half arm range, reaching Jake's sore place under the heart. Again Kilrain rallied, then another clinch followed and Slavin redoubled his attack on Jake's ribs. When the men were separated Jake jammed his right and left on Slavin's head, and repeated the dose amid a roar of cheers. Then Jake landed a right hander on Slavin's neck, causing the Australian to whirl half around. Jake followed this up with two terrible right and left facers and following these up nearly thumped Slavin over the ropes.

Third round—Slavin received a right and left facer from Jake, and replied with a slap on Jake's nose, which stung the Baltimorean, and he again hammered Slavin to the ropes, but Slavin caught Jake under the left ear with his right and Kilrain went down dazed and almost helpless, his eyes almost closed. He made a brave rally, however, clinched, and at the break away received another terrible blow, which felled him to the stage. He just managed to stagger to his knees and the gong saved him.

Fourth round—The men had barely met when down went Jack. Slavin hit him at will. Blood was pouring from Jack's nose, which was said to be broken. Four times Kilrain went to the ground and four times he got up, but there was no force in his blows.

Round fifth—Kilrain came up in better shape. The men sparred for an opening, and Kilrain was again forced to clinch. Slavin landed on Jake's neck, and the latter retorted with a jab in the neck. Slavin then rushed and knocked his man down for the sixth time. When Jake scrambled to his feet he immediately clinched.

Round sixth—Kilrain succeeded in landing two blows at the beginning of the round and then clinched. The Australian punched Jake in the neck and followed it up by a short arm rib blow.

Seventh round—Slavin went for Jake's ribs with as much vim as in the first round. Some good exchanges were given, however, Jake landing heavily, but that seemed to be a final. Slavin on the clinch again roasted Jake's ribs, but Jake was again saved by the gong.

Round eighth—Jake went in for a clinch. Throughout the round the referee was kept busy separating them. Slavin almost stove in Jack's ribs.

Ninth round—Jake came to the scratch in pretty good shape, but after Slavin had landed upon him once or twice he was again a mass of blood. Finally Slavin hit Jake a terrible left hander on the neck and Jake went down as if shot. Jake painfully rose, reeled and finally had to be carried to his corner.

Jere Dunn gave the fight to Slavin, who shook hands with Kilrain. The audience hissed the referee's decision.
