LABOUCHERE ON LOYALTY.

His Idea of Canada's Devotion to the British Crown.

From London Truth.

Lord Melgund's private affairs prevented his accepting charge of the Canadian voyageur party which was offered him by Lord Wolseley. With regard to these voyageurs, seeing how ill that disreputable gang have turned out, it must be no small comfort to his lordship to have escaped the leadership. Lord Wolseley, who would certainly not depreciate them, reported only 25 per cent of the lot as efficient boatmen, the rest being a nondescript rabble of the loafer class, who were attracted by the high wages offered and the prospect of a trip. It was a bungled business from the first. Lord Melgund, a stranger to the colony, with only three weeks or so to raise, equip and despatch the 382 men sent out, did his best under the circumstances. The Canadian press, of course, glorified their "heroes," but even it is now heartily ashamed of the rascals. This experiment of colonial assistance has been a costly one, and should be fruitful of a lesson to those possessed by the hallucination that Canada's loyalty is a reserve of strength to the empire. No such thing exists in Canada, excepting that special quality of loyalty personified by Sir John Macdonald and his political colleagues—the loyalty that pays. While Britain can offer a high price for a doubtful article, Canada is open to an offer. But the trouble which the military authorities have had with the voyageurs should make the government cautious of accepting the so called "aid" offered by the Canadians. The government of Canada will neither assist nor encourage such a movement as that headed by certain military, or rather militia, officers in the dominion, but (as they did during the American civil war) they will allow as much recruiting to be carried on as England likes to pay for, secretly well satisfied with getting rid so easily of a horde of unsettled and unemployed "tramps," whom assisted immigration and false promises have lured into the country to starve. And very probably, if England accepts this "aid," besides being expected to pay a high price for it to the conceited "troops" themselves, she will be called upon at no distant date to recognize her debt to the dominion by helping it in its thickening financial embarrassment. The Canadian parliament, individually and collectively, has as little love for England as the American house of representatives. It is just as well to bear in mind that the "loyalty" of a Canadian minister or politician is a shoddy deception, put upon the market at a valuation infinitely beyond its worth. There are plenty of Englishmen in Canada who would cheerfully volunteer for the old country, but these are not Canadians.

More Surprises.

—A well-known make of corsets for ladies is the Thompson's Glove Fitting. They are sold everywhere for $1.25 and $1.50. For ten days the Waterloo house offers them in all sizes, white and grey, for 50c a pair. Big expense merchants will pooh pooh this to their customers, and say, as they do about our 69c kid gloves (worth $1 everywhere), that they are not genuine. We will give $100 to any person proving this assertion. Greater surprises next week. 246

What the People Say.

Scared to Death By A Newsboy.

From London Truth.

In ordinary circumstances howling newspaper sellers are merely an unmitigated nuisance, but in times of war they become something considerably worse. At present, for instance, these bawling ruffians carefully ascertain the localities in which the relatives of officers serving in Egypt are living, and at all times of the day and night they perambulate these streets and squares, and madden nervous women by yelling out all manner of horrors and atrocities. A case which has just come under my notice exemplifies the unfortunate results which may follow from this pernicious practice. The wife of an officer on duty in Egypt was in an exceedingly delicate state of health, having recently been confined, and was, of course, extremely nervous about her husband's safety. Down the street one night came a brace of leather-lunged newspaper vendors, bawling out—"Another great battle!" "Slaughter of the guards!" "Navy British losses!" "Many officers killed!" &c. Terribly frightened, the unfortunate lady sent out for a paper, and at the same moment a loud ring at the front door announced the arrival of a telegram. The message was from her husband, assuring her of his safety, but, believing that a terrible catastrophe had overtaken the guards' brigade, she—on seeing the telegram—at once concluded that it contained the news of his death. She swooned away, and died a few days later, literally from the shock. Needless to say that the slaughter of the guards was a pure invention, improvised because the bawling ruffians knew where the house was. But cannot something be done to protect helpless women from being terrified to death by the yelling of false news?

Col. O'Brien can scarcely be such a bad fellow as Bugler White tried to make him out. Private Kirkup of the 35th, in a letter, states that on the march across Lake Superior Col. O'Brien accompanied us on foot, and some of the men falling out behind, on account of weariness, the Col. halted the battalion in order to allow the stragglers a chance. Going to the rear to encourage the men personally, he found one of the men sitting down, which happened to be one of our company (as it happened he did not recognize the colonel and began talking to him about himself, saying what he would do to him if he had the long legged — — behind with him, and other things that would not do to write. However, the colonel took it in good part, asking his name and the company to which he belonged. There was no more said about the matter.

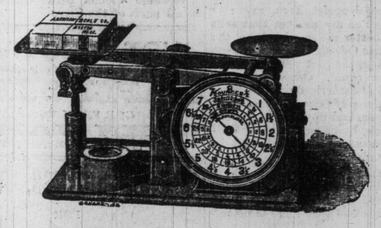
WONDERFUL NOVELTY!

COOK'S AUTOMATIC POSTAL SCALES



Indicates instantly the Postage to be paid on Letters, Newspapers and Parcels.

No Small Loose Weights Required.

These Scales are designed to meet a need of something simple, convenient and correct for Postal Weighing.

Their novelty consists in their SELF-ADJUSTING WEIGHTS and REGISTERING DIAL, giving instantly the weight of article and the amount of postage to be paid.

A single indicator tells the whole story by means of four circles of accurately divided spaces, properly figured.

The exterior circle shows the weight by half ounces; the next, the postage required for Letters; the third, that for Book Post, and the inner circle indicates the cost of Parcel Post. All calculated for Canadian Postal Rates.

These scales are built for a capacity to the limit allowed to be sent through the mails, which is five pounds; but in order to offer them as low as possible to many who have no occasion to weigh over one pound we give a device (including weights) to weigh that amount only, and furnish additional weights for 15 cents per pound.

Every business office should have one, they are also a useful and ornamental addition to a private house or library.

Price (nickelplated trimmings) $6.00 each.
