The Rose of Wentworth

"Don't!" she repeated with such stinging sarcasm that he cringed as if she had struck him a sharp blow. "Is it possible that after having used your wife so heartlessly—after realizing her wretchedness day after day, and looking unmoved upon her sufferings, you can shrink like this from the mere mention of them? The pitiful lies you have told me regarding Arley leaving you—of her appointments with another and the money she received from him, are all explained, and I doubt not that the Englishman whom you, with such pretended righteous wrath, named as her 'champion,' was some noble man who, pitying her helplessness, offered her his protection, and will show her every respect which a pure woman should command. Why could you not have been a man, Philip Paxton, and worthy of a sweet, true woman like Arley Wentworth?"

He stood before her, abashed at last, his head bowed upon his chest, his arms folded so tightly across it that his very breath was labored, while his face, even to his lips, was as colorless as his shirt bosom.

"I have been mad," he muttered under his breath, but Lady Elaine heard him.

"You have been wicked," she returned relentlessly. "I did believe, when I first met you at Hazelmere, that there was a noble manhood within you, for the stamp of it seemed to rest upon your face; but how deceitful appearances are has been proved by your conduct since. Ah," with a regretful sigh, "is it not a pity that a soul should become so warped and defiled? Why will mankind go so wrong, when the right way—even though difficulties seem to hedge us about—is always the better way?"

Philip lifted his head eagerly, and seemed about to reply, as she ceased; then a deep flush suffused his whole face, and he dropped again into his former position.

Something in his look made Lady Elaine think that this better nature had been aroused at last, and a feeling of pity began to crowd some of the bitterness out of her heart.

"Why cannot you do right, Mr. Paxton? Why will you not try to atone?" she pleaded, in a softened tone; but he interrupted her with an almost despairing gesture.

"It is too late for that," he said bitterly.

"I fear it is," she answered sadly. "I believe, if I were in Arley's place, I should feel that there could be no atonement, and, of course, if you do not love her——"

"Who says I do not love her?" he interrupted again, and almost fiercely; and Lady Elaine was dumb from wonder at his words.

"I do not wonder that you look astonished," he went on, half-ashamed; "but if an evil spirit had not possessed me, I never should have lived the life which I have during the past twelve months. But my game is up, and I might as well make a clean breast of it; all I have won for my folly and sin is your contempt and aversion, and the loss of my wife's love and respect. It cannot add to my humiliation to tell you that I would be a rich and prosperous man at any cost, and that I would marry the richest woman I could find to achieve my object.

"You may curl your lips, Lady Elaine," he went on, flushing again at her involuntary act. "I deserve it, but I tell you that I have been mad. I failed in my efforts to win you, and then I turned to Arley as the next most tempting prize. I was honest enough in telling her that I loved her, for she was bright and beautiful, and attracted me as no other woman had ever done, and when I found that your fortune was beyond my reach, my whole heart was set upon winning her. Had she contested Ina Wentworth's claim, and kept her fortune, we might have been happy in each other to this day. But she would not keep it, and my cursed avarice and wilfulness, my intolerance of being thwarted, has been my ruin."

Presently he resumed:

"I did not, however, expect to be brought up in my career with such a round turn as you have given me tonight. There was, I believe, and as you have said, something of manhood within me once; but whether the germ remains, and will ever thrive, I suppose only time will show. Certainly, in my present mood I can neither form resolutions nor make promises. Regarding my presumption and folly tonight in refusing my offensive proposals to you, I fear that it would only be adding insult to injury, and that you would feel even more contempt for me than you have already manifested, if I should express regret and ask your pardon. The question would naturally arise whether I was most sorry for my sin, or for having been detected in it. But you have read me a bitter lesson: you have told me wholesome, though nauseous, truths, and have aroused my almost torpid conscience at last. Perhaps some time—for I know you have a tender heart—if I am able to prove to you that I am truly repentant, you will not then scorn to say that you forgive me. Till then, Lady Elaine, adieu."

CHAPTER XXIX.

The next morning, Lady Elaine, pleading some excuse, went to Southampton.

She was in search of the captain of that vessel — the Black Swan, Jane Collins told her was the name of it—which had picked up that unhappy father and mother so many years ago, after being wrecked on their return from India, and who might prove—it was barely possible—to be Arley's parents.

That her visit was successful may be gleaned from her exclamation, as she sank back in the cushion of her carriage on her way home.

"Arley, Arley, my darling, if everything prove to be as I have reason to hope, and if I can only find you," she murmured, in such a tender, yearning voice, "you need be nameless no longer; and, oh, how glad I am that I can be the one to bring these blessed tidings to you."

A day or two later the London Times contained a notice calling attention to the fact that "Philip Paxton, attorney-at-law, had returned from abroad and was prepared to resume his business."

That he had been a good lawyer was proved by his former patrons at once pouring in upon him, until, within a week, he was flooded with work, and the idle, dissolute man of six months previous was bending every energy to the task which he had imposed upon himself.

A month after this good beginning he might have been seen writing far into the night, while his pale face, compressed lips and troubled brow, told that he was engaged upon no pleasant work; and when at last it was finished, he throw down his pen and laid back in his chair with a sigh that was almost a groan.

What he had written was a full confession of his wrongdoing. Among other things he wrote:

"Arley, I entered your room one day during your absence and stole the contents of your jewel casket. Yes, I am a thief with all the rest. I meant to take your diamonds only and sell them; but, doubtless, you were wearing them, for they were not in the box.

"I found, however, to my intense surprise, a hundred-pound note, and no miser, coming suddenly upon unexpected treasure, ever gloated more than I over the sight of that English money. A portion of it I used to gamble with and doubled my stake. Thrice I did this in different places, and then came home.

Kidney-Wort Tablets.

When you experience the slightest pain in the kidneys or urinary organs, you should examine the urine from time to time. Take an ordinary white glass bottle, fill it with urine, and allow it to stand for a day. If a sediment or deposit settles at the bottom, or there be mucous or pus with blood tints, use Dr. Pettingill's Kidney-Wort Tablets, in order that you may avoid Bright's disease, diabetes, inflammation, ulceration and catarrh of the bladder. One bottle of these marvelous Tablets will banish all dangers. Guaranteed by all Druggists. Price 50 cents a bottle or six bottles for $2 50.

DAN PATCH FAILED IN ATTEMPT TO CUT RECORD

Went Against His Own Time at St. Paul, But Couldn't Do Better Than 2 Flat.

George Edward Waddell, baseball pitcher, actor and bartender, found time the other morning midst his manifold duties in Camden to comment on the ingratitude of managers and the hard lot of star twirlers. Waddell was busily engaged tending bar in a saloon in the New Jersey town.

"I don't know," the Rube said, "whether I am released outright or am suspended, and I don't care. I like it right here in Camden, everybody treats me right, and if I am suspended I will stay here and pitch the season out for Manager Black's teams. Why, say, I got a bunch of offers which would make Connie sick if he saw them. Here comes a messenger boy with another one. That's the way they have been coming the past 48 hours." The telegram was from the manager of the team at Kenosha, Wis., and read: "Come at once. Name your own terms. Finish the season out and then go in business here."

Among the crowd in the saloon were two independent managers and an emissary of George Stallings, the manager of the Buffalo Eastern League team, bidding for Waddell's services. The latter offer caught Waddell's fancy. He said: "If released by Mack I think I'll go there. Buffalo is a nice town, and near Niagara Falls, and I could have a good time at the latter place."

The recent victories of Africander in the Saratoga Cup and Champlain stakes has put the son of Imp. Star Ruby far in the lead of great money winning horses now on the turf, his earnings to date this season and as a 3-year-old in 1902, footing up a total of $85,655. From statistics compiled here of horses now racing, Irish Lad is the second largest money winner now on the turf, with $74,270 to his credit, and Major Daingerfield is third, with $67,155 won. The latter now bears the distinction of being the greatest money winner of all the descendants of the dead Hanover, having already won $4,712 more than Hamburg ever did during his brilliant turf career. Africander has now won $73,255 as a 3-year-old this season, and in American racing history only three performers of this age excel him in this respect, they being Hanover, with $89,827 won; Tournament, with $89,755 to his credit, and Tammany, with $72,310 won. The son of Imp Star Ruby has a number of valuable engagements at Sheepshead Bay, Gravesend and Morris Park this fall and his prospects now look bright of closing the year with the American record as a 3-year-old winner to his credit. He is the fourth 3-year-old in the last ten racing seasons which has reached the distinction of leading winning horse of the year, Major Daingerfield holding this honor last year, while Ornament, in 1897, was the season's largest money winner, as was Dobbins in 1894. In the other six years of this decade a 2-year-old was each season the holder of this honor. As big 3-year-old winners the American colts have to go a long way to reach the English record, held by Galopin's son, Donovan, which horse at that age won the enormous sum of $190,400. Africander is the product of a young sire and a young brood mare, Imp. Star Ruby being 7 years old when he sired him and his dam 5 years old when she dropped him. Irish Lad is just the reverse, as his sire, Imp. Candiemas, was 16 years old when he got the Westbury stables' crack, and Arrowgrass was 11 years old when she dropped the Brooklyn handicap winner. Major Daingerfield's sire was a very young stallion and his dam was a medium aged brood mare, Handspring being 5 years old when he got him and Mon Droit 11 years old when she foaled him.

Ireland, as well as the far north of Scotland, had—possibly still has—its "horse whisperers," though the "brotherings" which give such permanence and geniality to the Scottish "plowman's whisper" never seem to have existed in the sister island. Irish "whisperers" have been lonely men, whose secret has generally died with them.

The most famous "whisperer" of modern times was James Sullivan, of Dunhallow, whose exploits are fully detailed in Townsend's "Survey of the County of Cork." No horse was ever brought to Sullivan which he did not permanently tame. Ordinarily restive animals he would master in a few minutes. For exceptionally vicious horses he took about half an hour, during which time he shut the stable door and forbade anyone to open it till he gave the signal. When the door was opened the horse was seen lying down and Sullivan by his side, playing with him as a child does a puppy. There was no tying up of the fore leg, or any other visible means of coercion. How his ascendancy was obtained no one could tell; "natural intrepidity," suggests Mr. Townsend, who was an eyewitness of many of his surprising feats. Anyhow, if he passed on the secret to his son, the latter must have learned it very imperfectly, for, though he gave himself out as his father's successor, he never showed the same power and soon fell into disrepute. Many brilliant offers were made to him, but he could not give up Dunhallow and the foxhounds.

A successor of Sullivan, named O'Hara, became almost equally famous, and was often urged to explain what was the secret of his influence. But O'Hara treated his questioners as Samson did the Philistines, deluding them with various unsatisfactory answers. At one time, for instance, he said the secret lay in "rocking" the horse—putting one hand firmly on his crupper, and with the other grasping his shoulder, and then swaying him to and fro, gently at first and gradually increasing the motion till you throw him. At another time he protested that his plan was to bite the animal's ear. Both these are well-known jockey tricks; the stubbornest horse, they say, will be wholly subdued by being thrown twice or thrice; and if you can get a vicious horse's ear between your teeth and bite hard you are his master and he your submissive slave from that time forward. As to the idea that the "whisperer" works by kindness, it stands to reason that that method supposes the entire education of the animal to be in your hands. If you have only half an hour to do your work in you must show overmastering power as well as kindly feeling. A horse whose temper has been spoiled by chronic bad treatment looks on all men alike as tyrants and bullies.

THE TURF.

RECORD STILL STANDS.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 31. — Six thousand persons saw Dan Patch unsuccessfully attempt to lower his world's pacing record of 1:59 at the State Fair grounds today. Despite the fact that the great pacer had gone against time on last Friday at Readville, Mass., and had been almost continuously on the cars until today, he went a mile in two minutes flat. The day was ideal, with scarcely a breeze stirring, and the track was in first-class condition. Time, by quarters: :30, :59¾, 1:30½, 2:00.

MADDEN WILL LEAVE RACE TRACK.

New York, Aug. 31.—When the racing season of 1904 closes John E. Madden's colors will have been seen for the last time on a race track. The well-known trainer has decided to quit the turf then and confine his time to the breeding of thoroughbreds at his farm in Hamburg place.

MAJOR DELMAR CHALLENGES.

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 31.—A. P. McDonald, owner of the fast trotter, Major Delmar, does not believe that the stallion, mare or gelding lives that can show a pace to his horse, and he has started to talk of arranging a race with the champion Lou Dillon. He says a mile dash, three in five or two in three, will suit him, and that he will bet from $5,000 to $20,000 that Delmar will win any sort of a race that is agreed upon.

While C. K. G. Billings, the owner of Lou Dillon, never raced a horse for money, it is thought he will accept this challenge, if for nothing else than for the sports' sake.

AT BUFFALO.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Two horses went down in the mile handicap at Kenilworth Park this afternoon, and Jockeys Minder and Walsh had miraculous escapes. Albula, coupled with Silurian as the Lamasney entry, favorite for the four-horse race, got away in front, and was leading three lengths at the first turn. Albula slipped and went down, and Mrs. Frank Foster stumbled over him. Both boys were sent flying, but arose unhurt. Neither horse was injured. Easy Street indulged Silurian with the lead and then came on and won handily. Albula was remounted and finished third. Chickadee, winner of the second race, was run up $400 to $1,000, and bought by U. Z. De Arman. Weather threatening; track heavy. Results:

THE COMING REGATTA.

The committee of the London Rowing Club held a meeting last night, when it was decided to hold the annual regatta, which comes off next Saturday, just above the pump house dam at Springbank, as in former years.

It was also decided to hold another meeting on Wednesday night, when the judges and other officials will be chosen. The list of prizes and entries will then be given out. The prizes are the best that have been offered by the club, and no doubt will attract a number of competitors, among whom it is expected will be a number of Sarnia oarsmen and canoeist.

A new feature of the regatta will be the dance, which will be held at Springbank Saturday evening, when the prizes won during the day will be distributed. The club look for an equal success for the dance as for the regatta.

Radway & Co., New York:

Gentlemen,—In regard to "Radway's Pills," I wish to say that I have never found any remedy that can equal them. For the past two years I was suffering from nervous dyspepsia and constipation. After eating I would have a sensation of heaviness in the stomach, feel like vomiting, pain and dizziness in the head, and then I would become nervous. I tried everything that was recommended to me. My physician told me I had chronic constipation, and a sour stomach. He could relieve me somewhat, but stil did not cure me. I was almost in despair. At last a friend persuaded me to try "Radway's Pills," which I did. And I am glad to say that they not only relieved me but positively cured me. Even after taking them only a few days, a regularity of the bowels was established, and the dyspeptic symptoms have already disappeared. Now I feel like a new person.

May God bless you and your wonderful remedy. I remain,

Yours for health,
