FEBRUARY.—Mr. Mechi's manures, prepared as above stated, are allowed to remain under the animals a month or two in winter, but a much shorter time in summer, but when taken out of the sheds should be at once carried to, and spread out on, the land; for, being so amply saturated, it can take up no more moisture, and, therefore, a shower of rain washes the soluble portions out of it. In farmyards, the earth, to a very considerable depth, absorbs much of the farmer's wealth in the shape of soluble manure, and so we need not wonder at the preference for the sheepfold, where the soil gets every portion of the manure. The utter carelessness of hundreds of our Canadian farmers, in reference to the preparation and preservation of manures, sufficiently accounts for their poor crops and comparative poverty.
