EMPEROR JACQUES OF THE SAHARA

An English Visitor Says He's Doing Good Work.

MAKES AGRICULTURE THE BASIS

Has a Well-Trained Standing Army —Will Not Allow Adventurous Foreigners in Country.

London, July 12.—Jacques I., Emperor of the Sahara, erstwhile known to fame as M. Lebaudy, of Paris, and the reputed possessor of far more money than brains, is now commonly regarded as a notoriety-seeking freak whose kingdom should be restricted to the confines of a lunatic asylum. That is the way he is usually written up. But an Englishman who recently has had abundant opportunities for studying Lebaudy at close range takes an entirely different view of him.

W. L. de S. Lennox is his name and he has just returned from a year's stay at Troja, where the eccentric Frenchman has established the capital of what he dreams will some day be a mighty empire. Nor can it be said that Mr. Lennox has any reason to be prejudiced in Lebaudy's favor. Formerly an officer in the British volunteers, he thought that he might be able to get a snug billet in the emperor's army. He didn't get it, because, he says, he would not forswear his English citizenship and turn Mohammedan. That was not calculated to make him an admirer of Jacques I. Notwithstanding this, he assured me that his Saharan majesty is a much underrated man. Instead of being devoted to mere idle show, pomp and vanity, he said that Lebaudy has proved himself an energetic and capable administrator, who is doing a difficult work in an excellent fashion, transforming a barren waste into a productive region and introducing law and order where brigandage was formerly the favorite occupation of the people.

"Jacques I.," he said, "has done wonders in a country that formerly produced hardly anything and was wholly given over to brigandage and poverty. Two years ago, when he went to Sahara, the territory over which he now rules was in a most primitive state. Now law and order have been established there, schools have been opened, an embryonic city of 6,000 people has been brought into existence, many acres have been brought under cultivation and yield sugar, cotton, rice and tobacco, while stores, granaries and other improvements have been introduced. His empire is self-supporting and well governed. He himself leads a most industrious life and is the hardest worker in his kingdom. His role is that of a beneficent autocrat. He has installed Frenchmen at the head of the different departments of his government. They are practical men and good organizers and have displayed remarkable tact in dealing with the Arabs who are naturally a most intractable people.

"It is true that Jacques maintains a harem, but he does so solely because, to obtain respect for his authority, he finds it necessary to conform to the customs of his people. There is nothing of the libertine about him. All the men in his employ are given pay and rations sufficient to enable them to maintain three wives apiece, which, by the way, is only one-half the regulation Mohammedan matrimonial allowance. He wants no outside interference, and discourages the settlement of foreigners until such time as he has more fully developed the commercial resources of the country.

"There is now under the emperor's rule about 1,000 square miles, and a population of something like 12,000 people. Through his domains there are constantly passing camel trains, originating in Central Africa. These caravans chiefly go to Morocco, carrying ivory, cereals, figs, dates, hides, gold, etc. Before he appeared these caravans were subject to constant depredations by brigands. Jacques I. exacts a tribute from these caravans, it is true, but in return he gives them military escort, watering privileges at the wells, and full protection.

"The imperial army is composed of 2,000 men, each with a camel, and a reserve force of 600. Every soldier is well equipper with the most modern small arms. These men, as well as everybody in the empire, can always count on plenty to eat, which is something they could never do before. It is self-interest which binds them to the new order of things. The national faith is Mohammedan, which Lebaudy nominally professes, although he is really a Catholic. Much of his power is exercised through the Mohammedan priests, and force is never used except to keep the peace. He is making French the national language, using it in all official communications, and teaching it in the schools.

"He employs a great deal of ceremonial pomp, and his durbars are grand affairs, but this is necessary properly to impress the Arab mind with his importance. Agriculture is the foundation of Lebaudy's scheme of empire. He is now getting two crops of wheat each year from 1,000 acres of land. This is to be doubled this year. Up to the present time he has carried on his operations only in an experimental form. These experiments have resulted so favorably that he has decided to concentrate his efforts on wheat, sugar and cotton; all under irrigation, as there is plenty of available water. I expect to hear of his exporting wheat inside of another year.

"When Lebaudy visits Europe his assumption of imperial dignity is always ridiculed; but on these trips he is by no means the fool some people take him for, and drives some shrewd bargains in the matter of securing supplies for the development of his kingdom. Troja, his capital, is a city of tin, the buildings being altogether of corrugated iron, but he will soon begin its construction in a more permanent form. He has decided upon a currency system, and the coinage will probably be minted in Birmingham, England. Dies are being cut for postage stamps, and I am told he will try to get into the postal union. Improved agricultural machinery is to be introduced, and the more serious stage of the agricultural development of the country is to be proceeded with expeditiously. He will not tolerate adventurers.

"Whatever the public may think of Lebaudy and his scheme, I am decidedly of the opinion that he is working along the proper lines, and that he will make a tremendous success, and that without the aid of any other backing than his own."

Cuban Diarrhea.

United States soldiers who served in Cuba during the Spanish war know what this disease is, and that ordinary remedies have little more effect than so much water. Cuban diarrhea is almost as severe and dangerous as a mild attack of cholera. There is one remedy, however, that can always be depended upon, as will be seen by the following certificate from Mrs. Minnie Jacobs, of Houston, Texas: "I hereby certify that Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhea Remedy cured by husband of a severe attack of Cuban diarrhea, which he brought home from Cuba. We had several doctors, but they did him no good. One bottle of this remedy cured him, as our neighbors will testify. I thank God for so valuable a medicine." For sale by all druggists.
