Happenings of the Week

To theatre-goers, and in fact all interested in the Public Playgrounds, this has been a busy week. "Alice in Wonderland" as was anticipated, drew large audiences to the Opera House, and many expressions of praise for the children were heard on all sides. Afternoon teas seem to have been most popular with the busy hostesses, they being able to entertain a larger number of friends in a limited space, than at bridge or other amusements. The coming week also promises busy days for society-goers, many invitations having been issued already for those anxious to entertain. It is a well known fact that in another month the shops will be again arranged for the Christmas shoppers, and then good-bye to social functions until the New Year.

Letter From Boston Girl

Boston, Nov. 8.—The school saving system has been in operation in Boston for one year, and the results are notable. Inquiry in 87 schools has brought forth unanimous approval of the system. The High School of Commerce reports that between November 1 and June 30, of the school term, 286 pupils deposited savings amounting to $2,862.11. The English High school depositors numbered 181 with deposits amounting to $1,604.90. The total deposits including elementary and high schools amounted to $8,694.59, the deposits of 2,712 pupils. Of these more than 600 took their money out of the school control at the end of the term and placed it in the savings banks. Money so placed amounted to nearly $6,000. Thus it is readily seen that the plan is working successfully in the first year, and is an important addition to the education of the younger generation in prudence and economy.

A new and notable clubhouse has been added to Boston's list of gathering places—the Business Women's Club house on Beacon Hill. Co-operation of some 200 women members of the club during the past two years has resulted in the remodeling and fitting out of a well built old fashioned dwelling overlooking State house Park, the object of the club being to provide a comfortable, accessible point of rest or recreation or convenience for the many business women who sadly need such a place to call their own. The broadening of acquaintance, the benefit of keping in touch with people whose problems are widely different, and the social possibilities of such an organization are emphasized by the leaders as main ideas of the club. Incidentally it will fill a long felt want in furnishing a place to which business women who live out of town can go to change their office suits for evening costumes, where they may have a comfortable and inexpensive dinner, and may be called for by their male escorts. It also offers an opportunity for the business woman to entertain a small party at luncheon or dinner. And last but not least, provides a homelike and familiar place to pass the night when one is kept in town by late work or recreation. The Business Women's club has thus far done well whatever it has undertaken and promises to become one of the notable organizations of the Hub.

Bostonians and visitors to the city have been keenly interested in the extensive exhibit being shown at the Boston Public Library through co-operation of the Boston Association for the Relief and Control of Tuberculosis and the State and Municipal Boards of Health. The main corridors and ante-rooms of the library are arrayed with numberless charts, maps, photographs and diagrams setting forth the efforts and results in the fight against the great white plague. Frank and convincing pictures showing the breeding places of the disease and the causes of its spreading are numerous. Maps indicating the 7,650 milk stations from which Boston gets its supply reveal that these extend even to St. Lawrence county in northern New York, 402 miles from Boston, and that each one is inspected by Boston Board of Health inspectors. The systems of food inspection, sewage control, purification of streams, and kindred precautionary measures are shown, and the entire exhibit is instructive and interesting from the start. The old saying that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing does not hold in this case, for there is not an inhabitant of the city or country but would be benefited by the suggestions and graphically portrayed facts of this exhibit.

First aid to the English language has been brought by another Boston group of distinguished teachers of singing, this time by Clara Doria as she is known to the operatic stage or Mrs. Clara Kathleen Rogers, as she is denominated in the year book of the New England conservatory of music, at which institution she conducts a course in "English diction for singers and speakers." Mrs. Rogers in a little book just published, assails the American fad of declaring English "a bad language to sing in." She observes that the reason why songs written in English sound badly as sung by the rank and file of American singers, is that these musicians both in song and speech habitually misuse the mother tongue. Well trained English singers, she notes, such as Braham, Clara Novello, Sim Reeves and Santley have not complained of their language or shirked singing in it. Instead they have taken pains to acquire a knowledge of the exact sounds of our vowels and consonants and of the proper methods of adapting them to their own voices. Foreign singers who study English conscientiously find no essential difficulty in accommodating the sound combinations to their voices—as several members of the Boston opera company have proved.

"If American singers," says Mrs. Rogers, "would take as much pains to learn the correct sounds of their own language as Mme. Titjens did in acquiring a foreign tongue, they would never again have cause to complain that English is not a good language to sing." Dealing with students from every part of North America, Mrs. Rogers has had a large experience with American provincialisms and dialect forms which often stand in the way of that clear well modulated utterance that is necessary to correct singing. "In America," she regrets, "we are constantly brought into contact with people who have had advantages of education and whose social status should call for all the outward and visible signs of culture and good breeding, but who nevertheless maltreat the English language in a most painful and deplorable way." The work of this former opera singer is directed primarily toward training young people who expect to sing professionally, either in concert and church choir work or on the operatic stage. Yet that her teachings might well reach a still wider audience is incontestable as one listens in Boston's student colony to the burr of the western R, the New England flattening of vowels and the all but universal addiction to "Huntington Avenoo" ad "nooz" of the day.

All the goodness of prime fresh beef is concentrated into OXO Cubes

—the wonderful new food-invention of the Lemco and Oxo Company, that has done away at one stroke with the old-fashioned beef-extracts and fluid-beefs for all kinds of cookery. No messy jars, bottles, or corks—no measuring—just clean, dainty little Cubes.

The cook who uses Oxo Cubes can always prepare a variety of cold-weather dishes—meat pies, hashes, stews—in the least possible time, with the least possible trouble. For adding richness to soups and gravies, Oxo Cubes are splendid, and take the place of meat. They are cheaper, quicker and more delicious. Buy a tin of Oxo Cubes next time you shop, and see how they save time and trouble, and how they improve the home-cooking.

Wonderful praise for the new OXO Cubes

"I found your Oxo Cubes of great benefit during the Coronation Durbar. It was bitterly cold, morning and evening, and I am sure Oxo Cubes kept off many a chill. I wish I had taken three times the stock."

* * *

"I am often bilious, and at such times when tea is rejected, I can always retain a cup of hot Oxo, made with an Oxo Cube, and find it most nourishing and sustaining."

* * *

"Oxo has been a blessing to me. After an illness last year I was left so weak, that it was with difficulty I walked about the house, and nothing seemed to strengthen me, until a friend suggested Oxo. Since then have never been without it in the house. I take it three times daily, nothing strengthens me as Oxo does, I also find it most useful in cookery."

Tins of 4, 10, 50 and 100 Cubes.

"Children love Oxo Cubes if a little milk is added, and I give it to my three little girls every night on going to bed, and often for breakfast. The convenience of the little cubes is delightful, and you can always tell the right quantity to use."

* * *

"To nursing mothers Oxo Cubes are indeed a boon. They are so handy between meals; and as a 'nightcap' in a glass of hot milk they are unrivalled."

* * *

"Oxo has been the chief support of an old lady (now in her 86th year) for the past two years. Nothing agrees so well with her, and it has kept her up through most distressing illnesses. I am still giving her Oxo, and shall continue to do so."

Not a little interest is excited over the offer made by United States capitalists, through John S. Leighton, jr., last night, to buy outright the Cobler-Sexton mine. While the shareholders asking $50,000 for the proposition, many of them would be willing to donate their stock to have the mine developed. One of the directors said today that he had 13,000 shares and he would almost be willing to give it all for nothing rather than miss the opportunity to see what is really in the earth on Patchell's mountain. If the stuff is there in the Cobler-Sexton, the whole mountain for miles is full of it. $12,000 of local money was spent, without gaining much depth in the mine. Herman Keller, the great expert for the Standard Oil Co., probably the greatest in the United States, was here a few years ago, spent a day following the out-croppings, and visited the mine. He was much impressed with the surface ore of the Cobler-Sexton and Dominion No. 1, and advised the local men to continue until they got depth. They spent their pile, $12,000 and abandoned work some two years ago. Many of them are willing to give the property to the new company and take a chance on new leases along the vein that has been traced for many miles.

Gibbs—Some say that in the next world people will be doing the same work as they do here.

Dibbs—That's tough on me. I'm a night clerk, and how am I going to get work in my line if there's no night there?

Gibbs—Don't worry, that isn't the place you'll be.
