PALACE LINEN FROM IRELAND

Many Artisans of Two Countries Are Busily Working on the Wedding Dresses.

London, April 27. — Princess Ena's superb wedding gown, of wonderful white brocade and shimmering cloth of silver, and five other costumes for state occasions, which Spanish etiquette requires the King to furnish his bride, are being made by the most expert workers in Madrid while Alfonso is visiting his sweetheart in England.

Several beautiful "confections" have been made in Paris at the order of Empress Eugenie, who sent them on to her goddaughter.

But other beautiful dresses are being made here.

One for evening is a princess robe of pale Parma violet satin crepe de chine. The bolero is composed of rich embroidery, interspersed with diamond dust, silver and mauve bugles fastening in front with four large diamond buttons; the short sleeves are finished with fine gatherings and narrow silver braid, while under the bolero are soft folds of chiffon of the same shade. The skirt is much gored and falls very full at the hem, where it is finished with a simple fold of the material headed with silver braid.

Another evening gown is of white chiffon over satin, veiled with a fine fancy Brussels tissue net. The full bodice, arranged with a dainty bertha of French lace painted in shades of the new art blue, and embroidered with fine satin, above which is a smart bow, while the very short sleeves are puffed and are hidden by the lace bertha. The soft trained skirt, very full at the hem, is ornamented all round with large chaplets of lace in a rose design, painted and embroidered to correspond with the bodice, falling over full bouillonees of chiffon and lace.

The third is a simple evening gown of pale forget-me-not blue crepe de chine. The full bodice has a square neck, and is bordered with Alencon lace in a Greek key design; while in each corner is arranged a large conventional flower ornament in pale blue opalescent sequins, thickly clustered; the lower part of the bodice is partly tucked and has a pointed belt of the sequin embroidery, with a large ornament in front. The short puffed sleeves show a short tight undersleeve of the same dentelle. The skirt is cut to fall in full folds at the hem, above which is arranged a band of the same key-pattern embroidery.

The visiting toilet is composed of white foulard with a tiny black check, and white satin birdseye spot. The bodice is arranged with a collar effect of fine Alencon lace, edged with festooning of fine guipure roses, slightly embroidered in pale blue; the festooning is caught across with narrow bands of pale ciel blue miroir velvet, and tiny silk buttons. The full underbodice is gathered into a deeply pointed belt of blue velvet fastened in front with a long buckle, and the high collar is also finished with bands of blue velvet. The full elbow sleeves, tucked from inside arm, have cuffs of lace and velvet.

Most charming of muslin, softest of silk and lace tea gowns are being prepared, mostly trimmed with lovely lace which Princess Henry of Battenberg inherited from Queen Victoria. The blouses are as dainty as they well can be, in white and a pale shade of mauve and blue.

A number of very smart tailor-made costumes and handsome coats are being supplied by Nicoll, of Regent street, who has always made garments of this kind for Princess Ena. Among those already made is a neat bolero costume in thin gray fancy tweed, with two skirts. The little well-fitting coat, inset with white cloth, covered with narrow lines of black braid and furnished with oxidized buttons, can be rolled back over a pretty blouse, showing a dainty trimming in black and white. The sleeves, coming a little below the elbow, have neat cuffs of white cloth and black braid. The graceful corselet skirt, with box-pleats in front and at the back is finished at the hem with a few rows of fine stitching. The other short seven-fold skirt, for useful country wear, has the seams overlapped, but is otherwise perfectly plain.

Another beautiful bolero costume of real Irish (Donegal) frieze, purchased from the Irish Industries Association, is in a lovely shade of pale Wedgwood blue. The tight-fitting bolero, coming to the waist, has beautifully head-embroidered fronts of pale blue cloth, worked with white, is trimmed with wide fancy silk braid the same color as the frieze, and is finished without a collar. The seven-gored skirt of this costume is similar to one made by Nicoll some time ago, which was greatly admired by King Alfonso.

In another costume the handsome Empire coat in fine black-faced cloth has the skirt made very full. The coat is lined with white satin marveilleux. It is trimmed with a large sailor collar in white and black cloth, on which are lines of silver braid and pretty pipings of white and black silk, while the edge is charmingly finished with an embroidery in white and black silk, which is carried partly down the fronts. Cuffs matching the collar finish the sleeves, and the coat is further embellished with large, finely cut steel buttons, and held together in front with short straps of black velvet.

Fine cream cloth, loosely plaited, is chosen for a handsome wrap, made very full so as not to crush a thin gown. It is trimmed with rich cream-white tuck guipure lace and appliques of handsome gold embroidery, forming a large collar-shaped emplecement to the mantle, which has flowing wing sleeves.

All the lingerie for the royal bride is to be of the finest material, with beautifully neat hand sewing and trimmings of fine net lace, and dainty embroidery. Every article will be perfectly simple and free from all unnecessary elaborations.

LACK ENTHUSIASM

John Dryden Points Out One Defect of the Irish Farmer.

London, April 27.—C. R. Devlin, M. P., in the Dublin Journal, criticises John Dryden for his statements made in that paper.

Mr. Dryden explained the success of Ontario methods, and thought they would help Ireland, though admitting he had little information regarding Ireland, except from reading Horace Plunkett's book.

He suggested that Irish farmers lacked enthusiasm.

Mr. Devlin says John Dryden should have waited before making the statement. Although he admits Irish farmers have not had grants and encouragements like the farmers of Ontario, yet they have had enough enthusiasm to hold on to their land in spite of landlord oppression and exactions.

He thinks this enthusiasm not second to any shown by Ontario.

Mr. Dryden's committee commenced its duties yesterday.
