The O'Connor Girls

By Mrs. Hungerford ("The Duchess"), Author of "Molly Bawn," "Her Last Throw," "Mrs. Geoffrey," etc.

"Ah! Quite so!" says Sir Willoughby, looking more disconcerted than myself. "Now that I look at him there seems to me to be something—er—out of the common about him." (Certainly there is! Any one who looked at Mick at this moment with his top-to-boots breeches tied up with straw, his coat of many colors, his old caubeen at the back of his head, and his general air of mad hilarity, would thank heaven that he was not of the common.) "These old retainers," stammers on Sir Willoughby, not knowing, I hope what he is saying—"are often—er—eccentric, you know, and—er—"

"What nonsense!" interrupt I angrily, yet trembling with shame. "Our old retainer! Do you suppose he is one of Dad's servants! He doesn't belong to us at all! We only hired him to come here to-day because—because—indignantly—"as you ought very well to know, we have only the old mare left now, and Dad wanted her."

"I don't see how I was to know there was only the old mare," says Sir Willoughby in a low tone, and so reproachfully, so abjectly, that my anger dies away. "I wish I had not bought Blueskin," says he. "You will always hate me when you think of that."

"No, no," say I dejectedly. "I am indeed brought so low, that now I beckon to Mickey to come up to the curbstone, and in silence I mount my melancholy seat; the other girls follow me. I give a hint to Mickey to start—why prolong this horrid minute. I return Sir Willoughby's warm pressure of my hand in a limp and dejected fashion. Mickey brings his whip down upon Mary Kate's back—we make a start. Sir Willoughby at the last moment flings something into my lap, involuntarily I seize it, and the wrappings having come undone, can see a box of chocolate creams—a hugh box—with a long cover, it is heavy, is it one box, or two, or three? I glance up. I feel I ought to refuse them, but it is so long since we had any really good sweeties, that I'm ashamed to confess, my hand tightens round my present.

"Thank you, thank you," I cry, impulsively, to the big giant standing on the flagway watching me. I go even further than this. In sheer gratitude I fling to him a beaming smile, and a little gracious wave of my hand.

A second later we had turned the corner at breakneck speed, and soon Clonbree lies behind us.

"See what I've got," cry I, lifting my parcel to let Geraldine and Kitty see it. I am consumed with pride—but it gets a fall.

"I've got one too!" says Geraldine sedately, but with suppressed satisfaction.

"Really you and I, Molly, seem to have been thoroughly appreciated."

"Not so fast. Not so fast," cries Kitty, waving a gorgeous box in the air. "Make room for a little one! I, too, have been appreciated."

My pride, however, is restored. On examination, it is discovered that if they have one box, I have three. After all, Sir Willoughby is a kind man. What a pity he is so ugly. Not that it matters; he is not likely to look at any of us again, after this disgraceful exit.

CHAPTER VII.

"It is difficult to grow old gracefully."

"Between the actingof a dreadful thing
And the first motion all the interim is Like a phantasma———"

Dad is gone to be absent for a whole month. It seems impossible to belive it. Never has he left us before, for more than a day or two at the most. But a month! It is an eternity! My eyes are still red with weeping, when a prolonged knock at the hall-door tells us that Aunt Jane Uniacke has arrived.

We all hurry down to receive her, thinking of Dad's last injunction. "Be good to her girls," said he, "and bear with her all you can, for my sake. And this will give you enough to do," continued he, "for, as a niggerdriver, I don't think she could be beaten this side of Jordan."

She is in the hall now, and all at once I remember her, though it is so many years since last I saw her. Who could forget that cast iron face, with its terrible little ringlets on each side of it, that shake and quiver as she speaks, though they could speak, too, if necessary? Sternborness is written on each small lineament (Aunt Jane is only five feet high)—and obstinacy, and a determination to rule, at all costs "She who must be obeyed" would have been a fitting title for Miss Uniacke.

"D'ar me! and is this Geraldine?" says she in the exasperatingly slow thin voice which nature—who must have hated her long before her birth—has endowed her with. "What a big creature! Really, my dear Geraldine, one shivers at the thought of what you will be as time goes on. Marry as soon as ever you can, my dear, before you are found out! Men hate fleshy women!"

Already I am boiling with rage. Poor old Geraldine! A terrible retort is on the tip of my tongue, but before I can utter it Kitty steps in. Kitty probably has not liked that allusion to flesh.

"Never mind, Gerry," says she, with a ringing little laugh, as innocent as possible; "we know they hate even more the skinny ones."

Aunt Jane, is lean to quite a very remarkable degree. I tremble. Aunt Jane is regarding Kitty steadily.

"Aunt Jane, no doubt, is right; but there is one comfort for her," says Geraldine politely, with such a terrible politeness, indeed, that once again I shiver in my shoes for what may be coming, "my vastness"—bitterly—"need not affect her in any way!"

"There you are wrong, my dear," says Miss Uniacke. "And, by the way, let me remind you, that to talk at a person who is present is very bad manners."

Here she begins to divest herself of her wraps, in which she is absolutely swathed, although the month is June and the day as hot as a burning sun can make it. We have taken her into the drawing-room, and she is now tossing her outside garments broadcast upon the chairs and ottomans. I do hate people who undress themselves all over the house!

"You are already wrong," says she laying her embroidered dolman on our best chair. "I am your aunt; you are my niece. I object to monstrosities!"

She turns calmly to Kitty.

"And is this Kitty?" says she putting up her eyeglass and surveying Kitty from head to foot with a leisurely air. "H'm! Geraldine tall, Kitty small. The long and the short of it. And the 'stout of it,' I might have said. No wonder, my dear, you shied so decidedly at my remark about the prejudice men have against fleshy women. A porpoise, my poor girl! A perfect porpoise! Heavens! what delightful names they would invent for you at Scarborough. I go there next month, and shall describe you. However,"—with a serene sigh—"we are all as Heaven made us—some porpoises, some"—with a malignant glance—"skinny—as you have so graphically said!" She turns round sharply. "There was another of you, wasn't there?"

Her glance falls on hapless me.

"Save us!" cries she. "Is that Molly! That long-legged thing! Why, she gave some promise of beauty when last I saw her. Oh, no; this, this can't be Molly. Some peasant's child, perhaps. A manpole! A mere twig! Without form and void! No adornment of any kind! And what's the matter with your eyes, child?" staring at my poor eyes, worn out with crying after my Dad. "Weak, eh?—They look positively red? A modern Leah, I declare! Some terrible disease, no doubt. How fatal to your prospects. My experience has taught me that, much as men despise fleshy and"—with another scathing glance at Kitty, who comes up behind it smiling—"skinny women, they still more dislike those with tender lids. There was but one man on earth who ever admired them, his name, as you possibly may remember, was Jacob, and by all accounts he was driven to his admiration—besides which he was a born idiot. Good gracious, child"—regarding me with surprised scorn—"how you have deteriorated, and they always said you might be good-looking, though I confess I had my doubts—well-founded, now certainly.

Here she throws her Paris bonnet on to the afternoon tea-table.

"And so your father has had to leave home," she says; "flying before his debts, eh? Gone to borrow money to pay them, eh? A poor look-out, eh?"

"You seem wonderfully well-informed," says Geraldine. "We had not heard of that."

"Hadn't you!"—contemptuously—"so much for the confidence that exists between your father and you. So like him to hide up everything till the last moment. Deception, I call it. He's gone away, at all events. You can't deny that. I only hope he may soon return!"

At this point she removes her soft feather boa and lays it on the top of the piano.

"Wouldn't you like to come up to your room?" asks Geraldine coldly. It is really more than the one can bear to see her strewing our poor old drawing-room with her hateful garments—the room that though now desperately shabby is still the delight of our lives. "It is much nicer to take off one's things in one's room."

"Presently, presently," says she, with an airy lift of her arm. "And so your father has sold everything on the estate, I hear?"

A Cure for Constipation and Headache

Dr. Silas Lane, while in the Rocky Mountains, discovered a root that, when combined with other herbs, makes an easy and certain cure for constipation. It is in the form of dry roots and leaves, and is known as Lane's Family Medicine. It will cure sick headache in one night. For the blood, liver and kidneys, and for clearing up the complexion, it does wonders. Druggists sell it at 50 cents a package. zxv

A bottle of Angostura Bitters to flavor your lemonade or any other cold drink will keep you free from Dyspepsia, Colic Diarrhea and all diseases originating from the digestive organs. Be sure to get the genuine Angostura, manufactured by Dr. J. G. B. Siegert & Sons.

News About Town.

It is the current report about town that Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs is making some remarkable cures with people who are troubled with coughs, sore throat, asthma, bronchitis and consumption. Any druggist will give you a trial bottle free of cost. It is guaranteed to relieve and cure. The large bottles are 50c and $1. zxv

A million intentions are less than half a deed done.

Mr. J. R. Allen, upholsterer, Toronto sends us the following: "For six or seven years my wife suffered with Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Inward Piles and Kidney Complaint. We tried two physicians and any number of medicines without getting any relief, until we got a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. This was the first relief she got, and before one bottle was used the benefit she derived from it was beyond our expectation."

Accomplished purposes make the ashes of the world.

Carter's Little Liver Pills must not be confounded with common Cathartic or Purgative Pills, as they are extremely unlike them in every respect. One trial will prove their superiority.

No man ever offended his own conscience, but first or last it was revenged upon him for it.—[South.

A man's wife should always be the same, especially to her husband; but if she is weak and nervous, and uses Carter's Iron Pills, she cannot be, for they will make her "feel like a different person," at least so they all say, and their husbands say so, too.

Many men have been capable of doing a wise thing, but very few a generous thing. —[Pope.

Among the pains and aches cured with marvelous rapidity with Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, is ear-ache. The young are especially subject to it, and the desirability of this Oil as a family remedy is enhanced by the fact that it is admirably adapted not only to the above ailment, but also to the hurts, disorders of the bowels, and affections of the throat, in which the young are specially subject.

The greatest of faults is to be conscious of none.—[Carlyle.

WENTWORTH COUNTY MEETING.

Delegates from nearly 50 associations in Wentworth attended the county convention in Arcade Hall, Hamilton, on Tuesday morning, the chair being occupied by County President Alex. Ironsides, and County Secretary T. S. Henderson doing duty as recorder. During the session lengthy discussions took place on several questions, chief among which were the toll gate nuisance, the market fee grievance and the salt and binder twine questions.

The Executive Committee was instructed to wait on the city authorities and confer with them about a free market in Hamilton, and the following resolution was unanimously passed re binder twine. Moved by Major Walker and seconded by Alex. Ironsides:

"That this meeting of Patrons is of the opinion that it will be in the interests of the farmers of this Province for them to do without binder twine during the coming season unless some arrangement can be arrived at whereby the Grand Executive Board can procure binder twine at a reasonable price without being ground down, as the Patrons are at present, by the monopolists in binder twine, who are trying to squeeze an unjust price from the farmers for their twine."

In the afternoon Grand President Mallor, and Vice-Grand Miller were present and delivered addresses that were listened to by a large number of Patrons and their friends the utmost attention being given to them. Others spoke briefly, and a very profitable meeting was then brought to a close.

Cheaper than Anæsthetics.

"There," said the dentist, with an air of satisfaction, as he laid aside his instruments; "that didn't hurt you much, did it?"

"Don't know," replied the patient, as he tried to get his jaw on its hinges again. "I didn't have a chance to find out."

"Of course, of course," said the dentist, complacently. "It was a quick piece of work."

"Quick nothing," growled the patient. "Who's that drivelling essence of idiocy in the next room?"

"The man who plays the cornet?"

"The man who tries to play the cornet."

"Oh, he's a poor, unfortunate——"

"Unfortunate! He ought to be unfortunate. I'd like to get at him once."

"Oh, well, he tries to do his best, you know, and, as he was in pretty hard luck when he took the room, I arranged to pay him a little something every day."

"What for?" The patient seemed loath to believe his ears.

"Tooting that horn. By comparison it dwarfs the pain that I give—makes one forget that there is such a thing as physical suffering. Influence of mind over matter, you know. When I have an extremely bad case I tell him he'll have to wait a day or two for his pay. It makes him blue, you know."

"What of that?"

"Oh, when he's blue he makes noises that would make one resigned if he were to be burned at the stake. It's cheaper and more effective that anæthetics."
